It Is Being Rigidly Exercised in Mexi-"Mexico," said an American resident of the City of Mexico to a Washington Post representative, "is undergoing a crucial test, but it is standing the ordeal bravely, and in the end will emerge with the prestige of sustained credit and greater prosperity than it has ever enjoyed. It has been a hard quitted. matter to keep the ship of state afloat in these times of extraordinary depression. A rigid policy of retrenchment has been pursued. Salaries of public officials have been cut, the army decreased, and additional taxes imposed in order to meet the obligations of the government. There is no system of direct taxation down there, and all the revenues from imports are collected in ly diminished in volume, so that it was a matter of necessity to increase the

LONG-LIVED CARP.

One Old Specimen in Fontainbleau Is Over Three Hundred Years Old. When the fish commission, some years ago, began to introduce carp into the streams of this country it is doubtful if they knew what a lasting monument they were building. It is pretty generally known, says the Washington News, that the sluggish and, to fishermen, despicable denizen of the water is gifted with a tenure of life, barring bance encounter with a hook, a big black bass with his back up or other vicissitudes of piscatorial existence. which exceeds that of most creatures, but the actual age that they do attain under favorable circumstances is appalling. There are very few fishermen who haven't a yarn about some wily old trout or bass that has been known to frequent the same pool for many years, but Assistant Secretary of State Rockhill tells of a carp that can give any of these fish points on how to attain a long life. He says that in a pond at at Fontainbleau there is, or was when he was fast there, a barnacled old carp that had been placed in the pond in the reign of Francis I. As that monarch flourished during the sixteenth century, Mr. Rockhill's carp is considerably more than three hundred years old. To prevent any mistake by future generations the gentleman who occupied the office of commissioner of fish and fisheries for his royal highness placed a metal tag in the arp's fin, and it is by this mark that the fish is known from the others in this little

WHAT A BABY DID.

It Nearly Got Its Mother Into Jali, But Got Her Out Again. Here is a rather pretty story which vouched for by a London Journal, showing how a small baby once got his mother into serious difficulties and then made amends by getting her out of them again. It seems that a poor seamstress with a child in her arms was tried for the theft of three gold coins. She said in defense: "I went to my employer's house on business. I carried my child in my arms as it is now; I was not paying attention to it. There were several gold coins on the mantelpiece, and, unknown to me, it stretched out its little hand and seized three pieces, which I did not observe until I got home. I at once put on my bonnet and was going back to my employer to return them when I was arrested. This is the solemn truth, as I hope for Heaven's mercy."

The court could not believe this story. They upbraided the mother for her impudence in trying to palm off. each a falsebood for the truth. But The emperor of Chiun is rejoicing in she so pertinationally asserted her inno-the arrival of an heir. The buby has conce that a novel experiment was made in her favor. One of the officials proposed to renew the scene described by the mother. The gold coins were placed on the clerk's table. The mother was requested to resume the position in which she stood at her employer's house. There was a breathless pause in court. The baby soon discovered the small coins, eyed them for a moment, smiled and then clutched them in his fingers with a miser's

HE WANTED WORK. And He Climbed to the Summit of Ben Nevis to Find It.

As silver has depreciated in a most unusual occurrence at that seavalue the revenues have correspondings on of the year. The visitor turned out to be a tramp from London. His clothes were frozen stiff and his beard was a mass of ice. After having been warmed and fed he astonished the ospitable winterers on the Ben by informing them that he had come up in search of work. When at the foot of the mountain some one had advised him -with rather grim bumor-to try Ben Nevis observatory. Thus it was that he came to climb the four thousand and some hundred odd feet. I was astonished beyond measure to see the tactics of the ants. When they saw their numbers were being lessened they dispatched couriers for fresh relays of soldiers, who appeared on the scene in due time to replace the killed or wounded.

"The moon after a time lit up the scene, but as there appeared no near termination of the struggle I gave up watching it, and, stretching myself again on my blanket, went to sleep. A Fish with Gills and Lungs.

The academy of natural science has just come into possession of a rare fish, which can boast of a pair of lungs in addition to the gills with which alone less favored fish are endured. The necessity of these two sets of breathing apparatus is readily seen when the habits of the animal are known. In Africa, where the fish lives, it inhabits lakes and ponds, which are often completely dried up during the dry season. As long as the water remains the lung fish lives as do the other members of the finny tribe, and breathes by means of his gills; but when the ponds dry up he burrows down into the mud and makes a round nest, where he lives in a semitorpid condition, breathing by means of his lungs, until the rainy season releases him again.

This fact was developed during the past winter when a large fancy ball was given at one of the private houses on the same evening as the presidential reception to the diplomatic corps. Those of the diplomats who attended the ball later in the evening were obliged to first change the court costume worn at the white house.
