QUAINT EASTPORT.

The Far-East Town That Was the Scene of a Recent International Episode. Eastport, the scene of the recent seizure of American fishing boats by a dominion cruiser, is not, as is popularly supposed, the most easterly town in vellows" or the "peach rosette" are the United States, as a part of Lubec known to exist, are hereby prohibited extends about a mile farther toward LIGHT, STRONG, from being imported into or planted or the sunrise, but it is far enough east to off place," and it is an old and interesting town. Eastport, says the New York Sun, occupies the whole of Moose grafts, buds, cions, seeds or pits arriving island, which is connected with the from any loreign country found infested mainland by a bridge twelve hundred feet in length and separated from the queen's dominions by picturesque Prssamaquoddy bay. Moose island is about two miles wide by five miles long, and Eastport village is situated at its southeastern extremity upon a harbor which is open the year round, never having been closed by ice. Eastport has suffered more from disastrous fires than any other town in Maine, having been practically wiped out three times within the past half century. In 1839 the busiwhen two hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of property was burned up. Again, in 1886, the town material and the like intested by any was visited by a conflagration which insector insects, or their eggs, larvae or destroyed one hundred and sixty-two buildings, causing a loss of eight hundisease or diseases known to be injurious dred thousand dollars. The people, however, soon rebuilt their town, this time in a more substantial manner than were of wood.
