ing measured hundreds of skeletons, testify that the men of our times are from one to two centimeters taller than the men of the middle ages. We possess their war garments, and it turns out that we appear not only to have grown taller since the time when these were manufactured, but our shoulders could never fit into the steel corslets of our so-called athletic forefathers.

The superintendent of the museums under the Second empire, wishing to put on the armor of Francis I., the largest of all in the Museum of Artillery, was unable to do so. It was too small for him, though he was in no sense a a giant.

And here is another example. In Switzerland, recently, on the occasion of a gymnastic tournament, the young men, wishing to close the festivities by a procession with historical costumes, St. Paul Kansas City borrowed the arms and armor of the

But it is evident that their ancestors, people of little foresight, never thought their grandchildren, and these grandchildren were unable to put on the armor. It was too small for them. So much for the stature of our ancestors. As to their supposed strength, we have no proof beyond the weight of the equipment of the men-of-arms.

But the harness of the knights was very much lighter than has commonly been supposed. According to one of the catalogues of the Museum of Artillery the weight of the complete armor did not, as a rule, exceed fifty pounds, and inasmuch as those who wore it were horsemen, it was the horse that had to bear the greater part of the fatigue.

DOG WORSHIP IN FRANCE. The Darling Pets Are Surrounded with

Every Comfort. A new religion has sprung up in France-that of dog wership. These darling pets of smart comen have a charming time of it when they are not being vivis eted by brutal scientific men, as is often the case; for pet dogs, like refined people, are peculiarly sensitive, their nerves as well as their tastes being ultra-developed. The prize favorite of his doting mistress is armed at all points, says the London Graphic. He has his own tailor, who provides him with a variety of clothes. He has winter coats, summer wraps, mackintoshes, comforters, pocket handkerchiefs, even respirators. Dogs have been trained to eat their dinner off a tablecloth and to carry a sunshade over their devoted heads. False teeth, too, can be provided, and dentists are found specially prepared to minister to the canine race. And with all this luxury the charm of the dog's company will be destroyed. This comedy or farce, interlude or whatever one may call it was kept up to the very end by the convives departing as lugubriously and solemnly as they had entered.

WOMEN AND WATERLOO.

What One of the Fair Ser Remembered of the World-Famous Battle.

"In my early days I knew a lady who appened to be in Brussels that memorable June," said Mrs. Newton Crossland to the New York Commercial Advertiser man. "She was then newlymarried and only twenty-three years of age. So little certain of victory did the English on the spot feel that her husband insisted on her dressing like a Normandy peasant, thinking such a costume would be a protection.

"Vividly have I heard her describe the partings she witnessed at the door of the hotel where she was staying and the despair of wives who were left behind-wives soon to be widows.

"Very graphically, too, did she describe the next day's events, when women-many of whom, too agitated to change their attire, were still elegantly dressed-made their way somehow to the field of battle, returning in the army wagons, supporting the heads of the wounded on their knees, bathing their brows and binding up their wounds, while a steady rain poured down on the faces begrimed by powder, which yet allowed their pallor to be

"I once met at a dinner the widow of an officer-I forget the name-who fought at Waterloo, and the lady parrated her experience of the afterbattle' scene. For some reason she had to cross the field of Waterloo, which was still strewn with the dead, and for this purpose she was blindfolded and placed on horseback, the steed being led by a trooper.

"She held a handkerchief to her nose -steeped.
