ENDURANCE OF THE CHINESE. Instances of Their Apparent Insensitive-

ness to Physical Pain. "Remarkable though the statement s concerning the endurance of Chinese soldiers, I can quite understand it." said an ex-police surgeon of San Francisco to a New York man recently. "The correspondent says that, though the men in question were shot through the chest and the head, they walked great distances. In one case, if I remember aright, it was one hundred miles.

'During four years of service as police surgeon in San Francisco I saw some pretty severe cases of wounded Chinamen-yea, and china women, too -and I declare their insensitiveness to pair seemed to be almost absolute. Part of it, I have no doubt, is due to racial, inherent stoicism; but I am also inclined to the opinion that the Chinese do not feel pain as we do. Now, I remember the case of a woman who was brought down to the city prison ward from Chinatown with her head literally split open in five places by one of the highbinders' hatchet men. From the very first to the last-I think she died-she gave no indication of pain, and did not even refer to her injuries. The Chinese dislike our surgical appliances, our knives and saws, not, however, because of the pain they produce, but because and to the New York Commercial Adthat sort of treatment is foreign to their ideas. Let one of their doctors put a pitch plaster over an injury, no matter if it be a broken leg, a lost nose or a hole through the lungs, and the man will be perfectly satisfied and will accept whatever will come without a word of suffering or complaint. They're certainly a queer people."

LION AND MOUSE. The King of Beasts Terrified by His Di-minutive i oc.

A mouse was put in the cage of a lion to test whether, as the old fables asserted, there was a natural affection between them. The experiment, say: an exchange, demonstrates that each was so afraid of the other that no affection could exist between them. The lion saw the mouse before he was fairly through the bars, and was after him instantly.

Away went the little fellow, scurry ng across the floor and squeaking in fright. When he had gone about ten feet the lion sprang, lighting a little in front of him. The mouse turned, and the lion sprang again. This was repeated several times, the mouse traversing a shorter distance after each spring of the lion.

Finally the mouse stood still, squealng and trembling. The lion stood over him, studying him with interest. Presently he shot out his big paw and brought it down directly on the mouse. but so gently that the mouse was not injured in the least, though held fast between the claws.

Then the lion played with him, now lifting his paw and letting the mouse run a few inches, and then stopping him again as before. Suddenly the mouse changed his tactics, and, instead of running when the lion lifted his paw, corner into the air straight at the

The lion, terrified, gave a great leap back, striking the bars with all his weight. Then he opened his jaws and escape. Of the two the lion was the more frightened.

It Performs Service That Could Not Be Accomplished by Any Other Means. A Mr. Shepherd has a very rich mine in an almost inaccessible part of the Mexican mountain ranges, a long way removed from any railroad, which has been equipped at great cost with firstclass mechanical appliances. Some time ago, says the Scientific American, Mr. Shepherd concluded that his equipment required five thousand or six thousand feet of wire rope for earrier purposes, but how to get it up into his mountain fastness in a single piece, as required, was a question. By no possibility could it be moved from the railroad to final destination on wheels, and he didn't see how it could be carried by laughing. burros; but a Mexican did. He explained his plan, got the contract for the 114-inch cable, and successfully executed it. Here is the way he did it. He coiled the rope up at fixed distances along its entire length, each coil being with Mr. J. A.
