Some Humorous and Pathetic Tales of Berderland Burials.

Cavalcade of Mourners Who Broke Ranks and Chased Rabbits on the Way to the Grave-A Girl's Journey with Her Dead Lover.

Everyone who has had a good taste of life upon the border and great plains knows the peculiar pathos of a burial there. Poets and writers of romance have done some of their most pathetic work in telling of deaths among the pioneers on the borderland of civilization and of the lonely graves there, hundreds of miles from any community or home. But there have been some circumstances connected with interventing in the wast as known to the Everyone who has had a good taste terments in the west, as known to the Our Treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases mailed free to any address. SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Atlanta, Ga. cowboys of twenty-five years ago, that was so unexpected as to be highly humorous. One of the first funerals to occur at Great Bend, Kan., says the Philadelphia Times, possessed unprecedented circumstances enough to make it humorous, if the unexpected is an at tribute of humor. The grave was accordingly dug. Turley was so full of wrath at having his grave prepared in advance that he rose from his bed and the same day left town in disgust. It appeared that he had been shamming all the time in order to obtain free victuals and care. Regreta were expressed that he had not been buried without waiting for the usual preliminary of death. The pleasant inclined attorney, Godfrey by name, being, as was his wont, in an advanced relatives were telegraphed for and responded that they would come immediately.
