THE BEECH TREE.

BY HERMAN BAUMBACH.

There stood in the forest an old beech ning, her sides were hollow, and pieces of fungus grew on her bark. She was woodman's ax, and only one daughter with a bullet through your breast." remained to her. This daughter was a young beech tree, with smooth bark and heaven-aspiring crest, and only eighty years old. That is the best year for a forest tree. The old tree still thrust out her twigs and leaves in the spring, but she felt that her life was drawing to a close, for it cost her great suffering to hold herseif apright. And because she knew that she must die sae felt her love mcrease for her beautiful daugh-

Spring was approaching; the branches were will covered with the glittering frost but the roots began to uncuri and the warm wind melted the snow. The rivers and brooks were swelling with melted ice. In the meadows the silvery catkins burst from their wrappings, and the snowdrops peeped tim-

The old tree spoke to the young: "To-night comes the violent thawwind; it will throw me down upon on me, when long ago He stopped to rest under my branches. You shall joy." So spoke the old tree, and blessed

In the night the thaw wind came waves of the sea; it rolled great masses of snow from the mountains that destroyed the homes of men in their progress; it roared through the forest, and everything that was old and weak perished. But the strong trees resisted it. It struck the old beech tree to the earth and shook her strong daughter as she wisely bent her head before the blast and the great wind swept on. Three days the daughter wept sparkling dew for her mother, then the sun came out and dried her tears. Then began everywhere such stir and commotion that the beech tree had no time to grieve. Her buds swelled and burst, and one morning a hundred thousand trembling, tender green leaves sprang comage of gotd and silver into legal the ground; they pushed their silken Red and blue blossoms grew up around the primroses and the sweet woodruff uncurled its delicate-whirled leaves. And in the midst of all this bloom nest in her branches and a redheaded woodpecker paid her a visit. Once s cuckoo came and once a distinguished squirrel with his bushy tail over his head ran up and down to see if he might not find an acorn. But men she had not yet seen this year, and they would have been the most welcome guests of all since she possessed the power to understand their words and deeds. After all, one morning, came a slender young girl with her long brown braids, who walked through the woods visit did not seem to be for the beech alone. She glanced at the decaying trees Then she set down her basket filled with May flowers and leaned back against the beech tree without a glance side appeared a strong young man. He wore a little round hat with a curling feather like a huntsman. He crept up as he stepped the quick ear of the turned her head toward him, and the tree thought: "Now she will fly." But the girl did not fly; instead she sprang toward the youth and threw both arms around his brown neck. "My Hans!" "My Eva!" they cried together. Then they kissed each other passionately; called each other pet names, embraced again, and the beach tree found it all very tedious.

Later they sat under the tree and they told, but it was all new to the beech, and she listened like a child to fairy tale. It was a wonderful surprize to her. The youth arose from the remont Arew out his knife and began to carve in the bark of the tree. This caused the beech great pain, but she held as still as a wall. "What is that to be?" saked the

"A heart with your name and mine," answered Hans, as he continued to

'Listen, Hans," said the girl, when the hunter paused in his song. "Your song reminds me of something. I know-people say-that in the autumn tree. Her top was shattered by light you go secretly into the woods for game. Let the poaching go. The of fungus grew on her bark. She was forester is your enemy. who leaned caressingly on shoulder, and kissed her lips. "People talk too much; don't believe everything they say, sweetheart." And putting his arm around her they went singing through the forest. When the couple disappeared among the trees a man in hunter's dress crept from the bushes. He carried his gun on his back and a knife in his belt. His face was white and distorted; he went up to the beech-tree and beheld the heart that Hans had carved; he laughed wildly and drew out his knife to destroy the writing, then changing his mind he thrust the blade again in its sheath. Shaking his fist threateningly in the direction where the couple had disappeared, he muttered, grinding his teeth: "If I meet you, you poacher, only once, on forbidden ground, you will have heard the cuckoo sing for the last time." With these words he went into the woods. And the tree shook her head sadly. The beech tree got many a sight of the faces of the children of men in the course of the summer-the poor women gathering leaves or dry bark, the berry pickers, foresters and pilgrims. But the most cherished amid the guests who gathered under her leafy roof were the youth and brown-haired maid. They made weekly visits to her, spoke of their love, embraced each other, and day by day the beech tree came to love them more. One morning before sunrise, when the mountains were just casting of He carried a gun on his shoulder and stepped as lightly through the underbrush as if he would take his sweetheart by surprise. This time his coming had nothing to do with the lovely Eva-but the stag comes this way to drink! At the foot of the tree the hunter paused and stood as motionless as the beech herself. The cool morning wind blew and the mist disappeared in heavy clouds. The gay birds flutter and sang about one screem. The un-derbrush rustled. Hans raised his gup. A shot rang out on the clear air. Hans dropped his gun, sprang convulsively into the air and fell to the ground. A man strode bastily from the thicket with a smoking gun in his left hand. The beech tree knew him well. The huntsman bent over the murdered man. "It is all over with him," and taking his gun he vanished into the bushes. The bright sun rose and shone upon a still form with set white face. Sorrowfully the tree bent over him and wept bitter tears, and the little robins flew up and covered the dead face and staring eyes with leaves and twigs. In the afternoon some woodcutters came that way and found the body.

"He has been shot while posehing." they said, and taking him gently up they bore him to the distant valley. An old man lingered by the tree. He drew his knife and carved a cross over the heart that Hans had made. Then he took off his hat and breathed a prayer. The leaves of the green crest rustled, for the tree prayed, too, in her own way. For many summers on the appirersary of the death of the murdered man, the maiden came to the spot, knelt down and wept and prayed, and every time she was paler, more fragile. One day she did not come, and the tree murmured: "She is dead!" and so it Years passed. The beech had become a mighty tree. Her bark was covered with brown moss. The wild vines clustered about her trunk, and heart and cross were both nearly covered. A man came one day and made a mark on the bark, and the tree knew her time had come. She bore the sign of her destruction -she must soon fall. Farewell, thou green and sunny forest! She had not long to wait for the woodmen, who came, and with cruel axea cut luto her very life. A gloomy, glowering man in hunter's dress, with long gray hair and beard, directed their movements. The beech knew him right well, and he appeared to recognize the tree. He came close to her and tearing away both moss and vine he saw that heart and cross were safe. "Here it was," he muttered, and horror shook his very frame. "Back, Herr Forester! Back!" cried the men. "The tree is falling!"

The warned man stepped back, but it was too late. With a deafening crash the beech fell to the ground and buried the forester under her corpse. When they picked him up he was dead. The beech had crushed his head. And the men stood in a circle roundabout and prayed for his soul.-Translated from the German for Chicago Tribune.
