A DIMINISHED SEVENTH.

BY EUGENE E. WOOD.

She was the youngest but one of a family of eight. Physically, her life Is the result of the was and could be nothing save one long crucifixion. Crippled and de-formed, there stretched behind her a record of suffering; before her the prospect of greater torture still. Nature had used her cruelly, for while ture had used her cruelly, for while her puny and misshapen frame inspired ridicule, or, at best, shuddering pity, she had been dowered with a capacity for affection that burnt itself into fiercer intensity waiting the love that never came. Misunderstood, she had gradually retreated into a little world of her own, with nothing to love. Nothing? There was her violin, but that could hardly be considered apart them. It was been downed it to any one suffering from this painful disease. W. F. DALEY, Brooklyn Elevated R. R. from Ida's own individuality. It was from Ida's own individuality. It was address. SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Atlanta, Ga. her violin that expressed more eloquently than herself could ever have done the loneliness and the lovelessness of her life. "It speaks for me," she once confessed to the old doctor, who understood her better than anyone else. "What other people feel they can explain in words; but I seem to have no power of expression except through my violin. Dr. Marshall was silent for a moment; then he asked presently: "Did you ever hear my boy Austin play?" Ida shook her head. She had heard no one. Her morbid consciousness of

Marshall, as she well knew, was a professional violinist of repute. "You ought to hear him. They tell me his execution is remarkably goodand, besides, geniuses like you two ought to know each other. I'll tell you what I'll do," he added kindly: 'I'll bring him round one evening to see you, if you like, when he isn't

Not many days elapsed ere the doctor kept his promise, and Austin Marshell, tall and strong, held the small, wasted hand of the diminutive musician, and wondered the while how the perfect soul his father had described had managed to find itself in that misshapen little body. And later on, when Ida had completely astounded him with her rendering of Dvorak's 'Romance"-wild, intense and heartbreaking-he told himself that such a thing was monstrous. Here was an untutored genius, beside whom himself would pale into comparative insignificance, doomed by nature to perpet-San Francisco ual solitude while, Orpheus-like, she ought by her music to charm into life the rocks and trees.

"You want some lessons to correct a few technical errors," he said at last, 'and then you ought to be able to hold your own at Queen's hall or St. James' with the best of them. If I could believe in the transmigration of souls, I would swear the lost soul of some repentant sinner is imprisoned in your violin.

He spoke with the generous enthusiasm of genius, mere talent is sparing of praise and begrudges success.

not confessed. It was but for an instant. For, in the next, overcome by the strong excitement she had just experienced, the bow slid helplessly from her nerveless fingers and she fainted.

Symptoms of little moment in an ordinary person might in her case prognosticate the worst, and any new phase however slight, was at once submitted to medical opinion. In the present instance, as she failed to respond readily to the customary treatment, Austin infirmities prevented her from attendhastened for his father while she was ing any public concert, and Austin carried to her room. She had over-excited herself with her music was the general explanation of the seizure, and this was what the doctor was told when he answered the hasty summons. In a brief space, however, she yielded to his restoratives, and before he left the house she had dropped into a sleep quiet and natural.

For some time father and son went homeward in silence. Then the doctor asked abruptly: "Does Ida know you are going away?" "I told her this evening," Austin answered, and in some confusion as he recalled the way she had received the "Father, do you know-"

"Ah! That accounts for it," said the old man, as though speaking to himself. "Yes. Do I know what?" "Well-I think-that is, I'm afraidthat Ida --- " He stopped short, for the confession was alike tender and humiliating. But his father, who had feared such a contingency well-nigh from the first, understood what had been left unsaid. "I know, Austin, I know. But what is to be done? The friendship that you have felt for her-that she believes she has felt for you-has been the one bright spot in her life. Seventeen years old-and seventeen years of perpetual martyrdom. Do you know how long I give her to live?" "I suppose that when she is twentyone-" Austin began, but the doctor cut him short. "If she lives to see the spring," he said, gravely, "I shall be surprised." The young man was startled, even shocked. There was silence between them for a few moments. Then the doctor said, with hesitation: "Austin, I suppose you would not think of putting off your visit to the elder brother with the brutal candor Harrisons? I know Marian expects you -but I think if she knew the pleastaken for frank geniality. "We call ure you would be giving that poor her the Diminished Seventh," he added, child whose days are numbered, she would be the first to bid you stay. In the originator of the questionable a case like this there can be no question of disloyalty to her. And, Austin, -if you can-for Heaven's sake let her still believe that she has found the affection she has craved all her life. The deception won't be very long, and it will comfort her more in her last struggles than I-or the entire college of physicians-could hope to do with all the science that the world has ever
