SHEARING CITY SHEEP.

An Interesting Annual Operation in New York.

The Official in Charge Has Trouble with a New-Fangled Clipper and Sours on the Job-Particulars of the Process.

Every year the sixty odd sheep in Central park are shorn of their heavy winter coats, and the wool is sold by auction to the bighest bidder. The shearing this year was rather more interesting than in former years, says the New York Tribune. It is great fun to watch the perspiring shearers struggling with the frantic sheep, some of which kick like young steers, and make things lively for those handling them. ome bright man suggested to the park commission that time could be saved, more wool taken off, and less profanity would be provoked if the sheep were sheared by machinery, instead of by hand. Accordingly, a machine, which is of a pattern in general use among farmers, was shipped to the sheepfold at Sixty-sixth street. The shepherd unpacked it and gleefully expatiated upon the trouble and time which would be saved by its use. In appearance it the glass industry when bottling be resembles a tricycle, with the unfortunate sheep as a passenger, while the fact that the number of cigars conpedals, worked by the operator, actuate | sumed annually in this country reaches the clipping apparatus. The clipper is the astonishing total of five billion. worked by a flexible shaft, and looks like an ordinary horse clipper. One man can shear a sheep by hand, but three men are required to do so by machine. The sheep is held in the frame by one man, the pedal is worked by another, while the clipping is done by a

When all was ready a struggling ewe was brought and firmly held in the wooden frame, while the shepherd, with a determined eye, started the flywheel humming by a vigorous application of the pedal. The shearer grasped the clipper and applied it to the breast of the unfortunate sheep. "Now you'll ee the wool fly," said the shepherd. ot off the sheep, but off the trousers f the man holding the animal. Her harp hoofs made his clothes look much he worse for wear in about three secinds. Meanwhile the machine had ome to a standstill, despite the franic efforts of the shepherd.

"Why don't you pedal, man?" roared the shearer. The shepherd said nothing, but, wiping the drops from his brow, went to work and soon had the wheel humming again. As soon as the clipper touched the fleece there was a slight scurry of wool and then the machine came to a pedal any more, and another man tried it, but soon gave it up. After some caustic remarks it was determined

DIVERSIFIED FARMING.

It Is, After All, the Only Sure Way to Sue

cess for Farmers. Steady farming, with a good rotation of crops persistently followed, is the surest way to success for farmers. Abrupt changes in order to meet high prices for some farm product are dan gerous practices. It is within the re membrance of every farmer when ha was so low that it hardly paid to rais it for market, but since then farmers have been making more profit off hay than almost any other crop. To sui the change, a great many dropped hay from their list of farm crops and tried with a wink. What wool did fly was to get along without it. The steady farmers continued to give grass a place in their crop rotation, turning it under when it would not pay to cut and sell it as hay, and when prices went up again for hay they were the only ones who had good crops to sell. By sides enriching their soil with the grass, they found themselves prepared to reap a good harvest when prices came around again to their normal condition.

Just now sheep have been at a discount, and thousands have been selling them off to raise something else more profitable. But sheep, both for wool dead stop. The shepherd refused to and mutton, will be profitable in the future. Several times in the past the sheep industry has been at its lowest ebb, but it revived in time. Steam and to go back to the old way and shear electricity are said to be driving horses out of the market, and that it will no longer pay to raise fine colts.
