> BOY AND ROBIN. Cold Weather.

During the extremely severe weather of February, 1895, myriads of birds sorrowful, perhaps, as the country rapid Willow oreek. where the birds winter is more thickly settled than with us, and there were more to see their sufferings. But occasionally the British birds found friendly shelter.

The London Times published, during the cold weather, this note from Rodolph Walther, a boy of twelve years, who lives at Tunbridge Wells: "I thought perhaps you would allow my strange bedroom companion, a little robin, which has taken up its residence in my bedroom; and though I leave the window open, he never goes out except to take a short fly. We pass the night together, and he makes his bed in one of my football boots.

"The other morning he woke me up by singing on a chair at the side of my bed. I suppose be thought I ought to be at my lessons."

Smoking in court-Commenting on the fact that not long ago a pastor of a church in the Whitechapel district in London announced from the pulpit that in future his hearers might smoke their pipes during service if they chose, l'Independance Belge says there is nothing so very strange about that. In the Mexican courts of law, it says, the smoking of eigars is sanctioned by hoary custom; there one may often see a prisoner puffing away at the fragrant word while answering the questions put to him by the judge, and the latter serenely adds to the general amoles. Mexican teachers reward their diligent pupils by giving them permission to smoke cigare or cigarettes during school hours, and whenever the worthy pedagogue is in good humor the schoolroom is thick with smoke. Hencking begets thirst; hence on the teacher's deale stands a huge jar filled with "pulque, the national beverage, to refresh the
