THE GREYBANK DIAMONDS.

"My dear aunt," said Mr. Loftue Blackacre to Lady Grissell Greybank, and if not, why not?" He had recently answered "interrogatories" in an action against the firm which he honored with junior partnership; hence the form of the question which her ladyship appeared unable to an-

"Of course," she said, with a sigh, "if you will not help me!"

The assistance she required was the investment of the funds settled upon her on her marriage by her husband in the ordinary shares of a gold mine of highly doubtful geographical situation. As her trustee he had declined to accede to her request, and had suggested that if a season in London was a necessity for her daughters she had better introduce a young American lady into society in their company and let her pay the piper. The choice lay between that and letting 400 Eaton square and spending the summer at Bournemouth. "I could not advertise," sighed her ladyship. "Of course not, and if you did you would only be answered by the newspaper people looking for something to write about. I have the very girl-Miss Loftinia McNease-I know she wants something of the sort."

"What will she pay?" asked her ladyship. The commercial instincts of her maternal grandfather, which accounted for her nephew's success in the city, were evidently coming out in her.

"Two thousand for the season and a percentage on marriage into the peerage-that is what I shall suggest. You constitute me your agent; of course I shall take no commission-from you," said Mr. Blackacre. "Is she very dreadful?" said Lady Grissell. "Well, she's American," said her nephew; "that covers a multitude of sins; and till her father died they lived quite quietly; high tea, you know, and cooked it themselves. Since I met them at Florence I expect she got quite accustomed to a clean plate for each entree, and she's really a very nice sort of girl."

"But is she rich?" "Enormously; old McNease died before he quite realized what a pile he had made, and for years she has had no mother."

"Isn't there some proverb about being born lucky as well as rich?" said Lady Grissell. "You might put us in correspondence, and then we will have an interview; are you sure she is not very bad?"

She's an American, my dear aunt, of the plain type, with—well, we'll call it an intonation," said her nephew. The rest you must really find out for yourself." As the business man of the family, be found his relatives a little irritat-"What shall you tell her about me?"

said his aunt, meekly, as he took up his "I shall tell her that you combine the blood of the oldest families in England, with the oldest country seat, the oldest plate and the most magnificent diamonds in Bunkshire. I know that will fetch her. By the way, I fancy you might, perhaps, get leave of the court of chancery to sell these diamonds, and have the proceeds invested by your trustees; you'd get an income out of them." "Never," said Lady Grissell Greybank, turning pale at the suggestion. Noblesse oblige-I should say noblesse defend, if I thought you understood French, or if the commercial principles of the city would permit you to appreciate the honor of your

"Well, it's no good getting shirty, my dear aunt," said her nephew. Simple faith combined with Norman blood is all very well as long as you haven't daughters to marry." Her ladyship gave a little sob Won't she-won't this young woman interfere with the dear girls' prospects?" "Of course you'll have to give her the refusal if there's a belted earl on offer," said her nephew. "That's what she wants; she will hardly look at me since I explained to her that I was not the Honograble Loftus Blackaere, and even if I was she need not mention it in introducing me to her friends." "Good heavens!" said Lady Grissell. "You see, she knew the governor was Lord ticorge, and she had no one but her lady's maid to teach her English customs; she is quite unsophisti-

"Poor giri!" said Lady Grissell, kissng him on the forehead. "I feel so sorry for her. I am prepared to quite

"Which is about as near thanking ne for putting two thou, in her pocket as the old lady is likely to get, reflected her nephew, as he ran down-

Three days later her ladyship 'was ECZEMA From early child-hood until I was grown my family spent a fortune of this disease. I visited Hot Springs and was treated by the best medical men, but was not benefited. When all things had termined to and in four try S.S.S. months was entirely cured. The terrible eczema was gone, not a sign of it left. My general health built up, and I have never had any return of the disease. I have often that passed into Ludy Grissell's eyes as she answered froze her blood-which it was quite calculated to do-or not, at that precise moment Miss Loftinia Mc-Nease fainted.

It was not a dead faint; there was nothing undignified or unpleasant about it; it could hardly be said that her features were invaded by an unbecoming pallor; but her expressive dark eyes closed, she held a perfumed lace handkerchief to her rosy lips, and with a low moan sank back in her One of her ladysb'p's own daughters would not have succumbed to indisposition in a more becoming manner than this unsophisticated daughter of a Yankee mill-owner; it really was one of the most winning incidents of the whole interview, and Lady Grissel Greyback bent over her with the tenderness of a mother and her own smelling bottle in her hand. "May I lay down?" she murmured faintly. "You shall lie upon the sofa," whispered Lady Grissell, slightly accentuating the "lie." "But some of your swell friends will come in," murmured the graceful being, dropping in the arm-chair.

"I will conduct you to my bedroom, and order the carriage to take you home," said Lady Grissell. "My maid shall help you upstairs."

"If I may be quiet for a quarter of an hour I shall be all right. I think I can get there by myself; please don't ring, your ladyship-Lady Grissell." So she herself accompanied her upstairs, and with her own hand drew down the blind, while Miss Loftinia, in spite of the gold-topped smelling-bottle in her hand, apparently fainted again, with her head on the lace-bordered pillow, and her ladyship returned to the drawing-room to send a message to her coachman.

Ten minutes later Mr. Loftus Blackacre called, and was duly concerned to learn of what had occurred.

"She is so charming! I am so sorry for her; she looks delicate," said Lady Grissell.

"Does she?" said her nephew. "Well, I'm glad you like her anchow ! "one is wonderful," said his aunt. "If she did not call my friends swells and if she always talked with as little accept as she did when she was at her ease, I should hardly know that she was not English." "Women are so wonderfully adapta ble," said her nephew.

"Excuse me," said his aunt; "I told them to bring in any letters that came. I am expecting an answer to an invitation I only sent out last night." And she took a couple of letters from a silver salver.

"I don't understand," she said. "Dear Lady Greybank, I am sorry not to call on you to-day, but some friends of mine who are going back to America right away insist on my going with them to see the Tower of London. Yours sincerely,

"LOPTINIA MCNEASE." "But she's here," said her ladyship. "I suppose she changed her mind," said Mr. Blackaere.

"Some women do sometimes. By the way, who was the pretty girl I met on the stairs? I know her face, some-

"You met no one on the stairs," said his aunt. "No one has been here but A. W. PATTERSON, Agent for Morrow County, Heppner, Oregon Miss McNease." "A lovely girl with light blue rib-bons all over her hat. Miss McNease has one rather like it," said Mr. Black-

"But that was Miss McNease," said Lady Grissell.

"Skittles," said her nephew. "It was not untike her maid, who is one of the best-looking-"

But his aunt had rushed past him, and was displaying an activity in ascending stairs unsuspected in so dignified a lady. Five minutes later he was ringing er bell for her maid, while she lay recping on her bed with an empty ewel case in her hand.
