TWO LOST LETTERS. How Postal Officials at Times Are Compelled to Use Their Wits. An English merchant was advised by his agent that a check of six hundred pounds sterling would be sent to him by the next mail, says Mr. Baines in his "Forty Years at the Post Office." It did not come and the merchant at once made complaint at the post office. The postman on that route was called in by the postmaster, and, in answer to questions, said that the missing packet was duly received and delivered. He remembered it distinctly-its shape, color and postmark. As his habit was he had poked it under the house door, with two other letters and a newspaper. The merchant's wife had picked up three packets and was positive there had not been a fourth. The postmaster went to the hous and examined it carefully. Then he looked into the back garden. His eye lighted on a litter of puppies. A thought struck him.

"Have the dog kennel cleared out, please." "Nonsense! Why?"

"Kindly have it cleared." "Well, if it must be. Thomas, take

"Well, if it must be. Thomas, take out the straw."

On the floor of the kennel, torn into a hundred bits, lay the missing letter and check. A current of air along the passage had blown the letter about. The puppies, naturally enough, had pounced upon it as a plaything and had had a good time.

A merchant complained of the loss of a letter mailed from his office containing some hundreds of pounds in Bank of England notes. Finally an expert from the post office department called upon him.

"Believe me, sir," the expert said, "I have an object in what I ask. Will you kindly sit at your desk and recall each operation connected with the missing letter?"

"With pleasure. I sit here, I take a sheet of this note paper and one of the loss of this note paper and one of the state of Oregon, dated spendant.
