CHINESE DINING-OUT GIRLS.

They Are Employed to Amuse Men at Dinners.

When, for instance, a Chinese gentleman intends giving a dinner to three friends he will arrange for it to be provided on a flower boat at a certain hour, and also for the company of eight dining-out girls—two for each gentleman.

They are dressed in a very fancy and pretty way. I call them dining-out girls, as it best describes to me their calling. They will come prettily dressed, their hair done up in most wonderful shapes and brushed over with a sort of varnish which makes it appear like a fantastic head-dress, carved in ebony. They will ornament this structure with bright flowers (though the weather will be as stiff as their hair); or they will sometimes add jade, gold or feather-inlaid ornaments. Their faces will be painted in white and pink—very artistically painted, smooth and soft-looking, delicately traced; sharp black crescents will mark their eyebrows. Daintily, demurely they will come and pretty to look upon; but seemingly one touch would destroy their artistic effects, as a rough hand the radiance of a butterfly's wing.

Two of these young ladies will attend to each gentleman, sitting slightly back from the table at each side of the entertained. They will fill his liquor cups, slip from them and pass them out; they will bring in foot wine and tea, and change the dishes and attend to their wants. The meal will last for a long time. Eventually all will rise and retire to an outer room furnished with brocade covered with matting. Opium pipes will be there for those who care for them and tobacco and cigars in plenty. The girls will sit on the couch with all the pipes and will eat watermelon seeds, with the gentlemen will recline at their ease, enjoying their society.

STANDARD YARD AND POUND.

Sealed in the Walls of Parliament and Opened Every Twenty Years.

The originals of our yard measure and pound weight—otherwise, the British standard weights and measures—are sealed or walled up in the sides of the house of parliament at London. The cavity in the wall in which these precious standards are preserved somewhat resembles a tomb and can be opened only by tearing away the wall. The two articles which are therein so safely encoined are both of metal. The yard measure is of bronze, in the shape of a bar, thirty-eight inches in length, thirty-six sections, or one yard, having been marked off upon it with some finely scaled instrument. The weight standard is a cube of platinum, weighing exactly sixteen ounces. Weighty as it is, it is scarcely more than an inch in extent on either side, and if sold for the metal there is in it, it would bring nearly two hundred dollars.

CHINESE PUNISHMENTS.

In December, 1891, I was in Canton. One afternoon I visited the principal law court. Two prisoners in chains were introduced before me. They were infirm to walk; the other youth, tolerably vigorous, but abject and forlorn in demeanor. The presiding mandarin appeared, sat down and sipped his tea, while an official pattered out a long oration, presumably an indictment, for the prisoners proceeded, as I understood, to plead "not guilty." What followed, says a writer in the Spectator, was this: The old man was held up—not held down—while a stolid Chinaman, forged him with long, pliant arms above the knees. The youth was dressed in his chains, which were then piled up in front of him. Upon his feet, hands and pig-tails were then attached by a cord to a post behind him and tightly secured.
