DANGEROUS LAKES. Mysterious Submarine Currents in Some of the Northern Waters. Little Shuswap lake is stated to have a flat bottom, with a depth varying from fifty-eight to seventy-four feet, measured from the mean high water mark. The deepest water found in the Great Shuswap, says the Vancouver World, was five hundred and fifty-five feet, about six miles northward from Cinnemousun narrows, in Seymour arm, though the whole lake is notably deep. Adams lake, however, exceeds either of the Shuswaps, as its average depth for twenty miles is upward of one thousand one hundred feet, and at one point a depth of one thousand nine hundred feet was recorded. In the northwest corner of this lake, at a depth of one thousand one hundred and eighteen feet, the purpose of the scientific explorers was defeated by the presence of mysterious submarine currents, which played with the sounding line like some giant fish and prevented could have been created at this depth, and scientific curiosity will, no doubt, impel either public or private enterscene this summer to endeavor to solve the riddle. As the height of the surface of this lake is one thousand three hundred and eighty feet above the sea level its present bed is, therefore, only one hundred and ninety feet above the sea, although distant two hundred miles from the nearest part of the ocean. On one occasion, says the Florida Times-Union, Mr. Swan was engaged in presenting the case of a woman who petitioned the court to grant her a udicial separation from her husband, workingman, and urged that as she was in extreme poverty she was entitled to alimony according to her husband's means.

With a voice broken in its pathos the lawyer dilated on the imperative necessity of the case, declaring that his lient was utterly destitute, not having a mattress to lie upon, and not possessing the means to purchase a crust of When the evidence had been heard the judge, who well knew the counsel's powers of exaggeration, turned to the appellant and addressed to her a few questions. "Have you, then, no occupation?"

'Yes, my lord; I am a nurse," was the incantious reply. "And where are you employed?"

"I am at Mr. Swan's," she unwittingrejoined, pointing to her counsel. It was with the greatest difficulty that the judge refrained from joining this admission was hailed.

The present occupant of the cottage is a direct descendant of him who entertained Bonaparte beneath his roof, and the report made by the French consul says that the peasant tells with enthusiasm the details of the imperial visit, which had been handed down from generation to generation, and that he exhibits to visitors a statuette of the emperor, which shows him seated on a throne with the world beneath his feet. This statuette is very old, and the pensant regards it with the utmost reverence.

No wonder the old lady in the follow ing story, taken from the Evangelist, was somewhat in doubt: In the "monument room" of Trinity church is a large marble tablet put up in memory of the late Bishop Bobart. It is a bas-relief, representing the bishop as dying, and sinking into the arms of an allegorieal female figure, probably intended for the angel of death. Years ago an aged couple from the country were shown about the church, and when they reached the tablet they paused long before it. At last the dear old lady spoke. HOMES OF RIVER PIRATES. in the Mountain Sides Are Watched with Awe by Longshoreme Along the west shore of the Hudson river, between West Point and Esopus, according to the New York World, there are several sidehill openings that are supposed to lead into big recesses not yet explored. Daring men have made the attempt to discover the interior, but have been frightened into a retreat by all sorts of imaginings. At Marlborough, Highland and in the famous Storm King mountain, at Cornwall, these rocky openings are watched by longshoremen, who have reason to believe that valuable property is contained therein. A Cornwall fisherman says he believes that one of these caves, near the foot of Storm King, is the rendezvous of a gang of New York thieves, who receive and dispose of their ill-gotten stock on a strict mercantile basis. He remembers that about the 1st of April he and his father saw a small boat, in which were four men, put ashore at this point. It was an inky black night, and it was not safe for small craft in the wind-tossed water of Cornwall bay. The fisherman watched the landing and saw the company, who were dis-tinguished by the lanterns they carried, work their way up the mountain side. About twenty minutes after the landing the lights were lost sight of at a point about one hundred feet from the water's edge.

The supposition is that these men entered one of those mercantile caves to make ready for the year's business. No one has ventured near the place, although several hunters say that there is an opening at the spot designated by the Cornwall man. It is believed that this cave is the main resort of river pirates and robbers, who plunder in the Hudson river valley, and if so there is considerable danger attending a visitation to the locality. This site is particularly lonely and deserted. It can be located by passengers on the day boats as they are passing. It is about three hundred feet west of the place where an attempt has been made to quarry stone for nd to reach it one must run the risk of being bitten by the most poisonous snakes.

An Urgent Landlady. An aged lady complained to a London magistrate that because she was a little behind with herrent her landlady followed her to church and asked for it there. The landlady come into the pew alongside her, and when she was joining in the responses was constantly whispering to her about the rent. When it came to the response: "Incline our hearts," the landlady would add: "To pay our rent." The magistrate said it was very aunoying, but there was nothing illegal in it.
