Where They Met.
McKinley Bill, with Napoleon eye.
Says "Bryan let's drink some Linwood Rye; We meet as friends, my words are few; I hope they don't, dear Bryan bore U." And Bryan says, in a joking manner, "I wonder if that's what the matter with Hanna. That's horse and horse, you funny fellow. When I see my wife I am bound to tell." Then they gravely bowed, and they winked an eye.
And they drank some more good Linwood Rye.

SENATOR MITCHELL SPEAKS.
Assisted by Hon. C. W. Fulton, he Addressed the Largest Political Gathering Ever Assembled in Heppner.
About one fifth of Morrow county assembled in Heppner on Tuesday last to hear the political issue of the day discussed by Senator John H. Mitchell and Hon. Chas. W. Fulton.
The meeting was presided over by Hon. J. N. Brown, who in a few well chosen remarks, introduced Senator Mitchell as the first speaker of the day. He was greeted with great applause and it was some time before it was suitably quiet for the Senator to begin. He first referred to the organization of this county and to the fact that although at that time we were represented by a democrat, "Uncle Jack Morrow," that he, by the vote of that representative had received the support of our people, and expressed his pleasure in being permitted for the first time to appear before a Morrow county audience.
The senator then took up the issues dividing the two great parties; first paying his respects to the financial question, by referring to his position on that question, and inviting any one who took issue with him to speak right out. After referring in a pleasant way to his "planet of Mrs.'s" speech, he read the financial plank of the republican platform, by section, giving a full and complete analysis and explanation as he proceeded; showing to the entire satisfaction of the majority of the large audience that bimetalism could only be maintained in this country by carrying out the declaration of the St. Louis platform. The senator showed conclusively that he had at no time contended that this country would prosper with the free coinage of silver unless that free coinage could be had in connection with protection and reciprocity in accordance with the well established republican idea of legislation along those lines.
Referring to the probability of securing international bimetalism, the senator said that the republican party was its only friend in this country; the popular party favored independent free coinage of silver by this country alone at the ratio of 16 to 1. The national democratic party, being in full and complete harmony with President Cleveland's views upon the subject, were in favor of a single gold standard and against the further use of silver as money by this country; making it very plain to all that international bimetalism has never had a friend in President Cleveland or the present democratic administration.
The senator then proceeded to show, by quoting from McKinley and other republican leaders, that the party was earnestly committed to the principle, and that the sentiment was not only rapidly growing in this country but in Europe as well, England having taken a step in that direction when on the 17th of March, 1896, the British parliament unanimously passed a resolution which "urges upon the government the advisability of doing all in its power to secure an international agreement and stable monetary par of exchange between gold and silver," and also that France and Germany were greatly interested and actively moving in the direction of international bimetalism. When the senator told his audience that in his opinion such a step could be done to force international bimetalism by doubling the duties on products from Great Britain and hereon until that nation shall agree with the United States and other countries for the coinage and use of silver, the applause that greeted the sentiment showed that he had touched a popular chord.
The arguments were plain and conclusive that the Chicago platform means silver monometallicism, the Indianapolis platform gold monometallicism, and that we could only look to the carrying out of the declarations of the St. Louis platform upon which Major McKinley was nominated to secure for this country what the people really desire—true bimetalism.
The speaker then proceeded to show that the country was not suffering so much from the financial legislation of 1873 as it was the tariff legislation of 1891. The first thing to do in order to insure prosperity was to re-enact tariff laws along the line of the protection of American industries and thus give employment to thousands of honest American working men who are now in enforced idleness. Tariff and reciprocity in the past, and the country prosperous in the past, and we can safely turn our faces toward the advocates of these cardinal principles of republicanism, that have always gone hand in hand with prosperity.
The senator in conclusion made an eloquent plea for the sustaining of the federal laws, and asked his hearers to put patriotism above partisanship and not by a vote give approval to the sentiment expressed in the Chicago platform in its concern of President Cleveland and the supreme court.
The senator admonished his hearers to remember that this is not a campaign of one issue. The question to be decided was whether or not we would return to the business principles advocated by the republican party or permit the democratic party to continue to experiment, while the people suffer.
The frequency with which the senator's speech met with applause, showed that the large audience were in harmony with the views of the speaker.
At the conclusion of the senator's speech the chairman introduced Hon. Chas. W. Fulton, who, after a few preliminary remarks, at once proceeded to discuss the issue of the day in a way that completely captivated his audience and for three quarters of an hour, analyzed the doctrine of democracy in a way that brought forth shouts of applause and showed conclusively that his telling points and apt illustrations hit the mark. His arguments were logical and convincing, democracy was shown up in its true light and its pretenses exposed in a way that was pleasing and convincing.

"Charley" Fulton was personally known by but few in this county prior to his coming among us on Tuesday, although his reputation as a campaign orator was well known. He fully sustained that well earned reputation and it is safe to say he will have calls in the future to address Morrow county audiences. Morrow county is the friend of Chas. W. Fulton.
Taken all in all, Tuesday's meeting was the largest one of its kind ever assembled in this county, and the only regale that we had no hall large enough to accommodate all who desired to hear the distinguished speakers. The cause of McKinley and protection is on the ascendency in Morrow county and our people can be safely entrusted to vote on the 3rd of November next, for the return of that policy that has given them peace and prosperity in the past.

When wear begins to exceed repair in your body you are going to fall sick. The signs of it are: loss of flesh, paleness, weakness, nervousness, etc. The repair needed is food. You think you eat enough, and yet you feel that you wear out more tissue, energy, nerve-force, than your food makes for you. The difficulty is that you do not digest enough. And this is so serious it is worth sitting down seriously to think about. If you can't digest what you eat, take a few doses of Shaker Digestive Cordial. Sold by druggists at 10 cents to $1.00 per bottle.
FIRE WITHOUT SMOKE.
A Berlin Inventor's Scheme for Burning Powdered Coal is Successful.
Wherever there's smoke there's fire is an adage based on observation of unvarying physical laws, but the reverse does not always hold good, for there may be fire without smoke, or at all events without apparent smoke.
In Berlin, according to the Newcastle Chronicle, an inventor has succeeded in devising a means for insuring complete combustion without the emission of smoke, and his method has, on repeated tests, proved so satisfactory that two of the most important steamshiping companies in Germany have decided on adopting it to their steamers. In this system coal, reduced to powder in centrifugal disintegrators, is introduced into a pen-shaped combustion chamber lined with firebrick, and fitted with an induction apparatus like those used in petroleum-fired furnaces, the coal dust being drawn along by a jet of steam or compressed air. The combustion chamber, which takes the place of a furnace, is provided with two apertures, one in the center line of the boiler, occupying the position of the usual fire-hole door, while the other, on the opposite side of the combustion chamber, serves for introducing the coal dust through a pipe, so placed that the dust is evenly dispersed over the whole surface of the chamber. After the first ignition, which may be effected by any source of heat, the combustion continues regularly and intensely under the action of the air-current, which is regulated in accordance with the quantity of dust required to produce the necessary heat. The air or steam and dust are intimately mixed in the zone of combustion, while the speed of the current, which has served as a vehicle for the dust, is much reduced. Each particle of fuel held in suspension is by this method brought into such close contact with the oxygen necessary for its combustion that this combustion is so complete as to allow of practically no smoke being generated.
LITERARY LABOR.
Value of Early Rising and Danger of Oversleeping.
To make literary work healthy is a simple process, depending on the mode in which each day is allotted to it, and also on the mode in which the body is physically trained and disposed to carry it out, writes Sir R. W. Richardson in the Aesthete.
The first grand secret is to begin the day well by early rising. The universal experience of the wisest men of all ages is in favor of the habit of getting up early in the morning. The practice is closely connected with length of life. It is also closely connected with happiness and activity of life. With the early hours of the morning literary work is always most fruitfully associated, when the habit of early work is once acquired. Thoughts are freshest then; the arrangement of thoughts is clearest then; memory is keenest then. Thus thought, method and memory conspire together, and labor becomes pleasure. Make the sun your fellow-workman.
In the work of the day of the literary life nothing is so wholesome as to carry out the work without strain. There is always some little difficulty in getting into harness, but this mastered, work becomes easy enough. I cannot say that I have ever known a man who works when he is forced to it, and Miss Martineau tells us that after the first quarter of an hour she found everything easy. With healthy minds this experience is common. There is, however, a danger connected with it that must not be forgotten; that danger is the too long continuance of the labor after it has become easy. With some this danger is serious. The work is so fascinating, the time goes so quickly, that the mind, and the physical powers are, as it were, stolen upon, and refused outrageously.
