THE ANTS TALKED.

How a Naturalist Proved They Conversed with Each Other. It is becoming the general belief among naturalists that all living creatures have some communication with each other, at least to the extent of making their wants, fears, etc., known to others of their species. A writer on ants recently investigated the matter as far as those interesting little insects are concerned. He saw a drove of ants of a small black variety, which were apparently moving to new quarters, those going in a certain direction all carrying eggs or sick and helpless relatives, while those moving in the opposite direction appeared to have just deposited their burdens and to be returning for another load of "household effects."

They were probably pretty weil along with their work, judging by the leisurely way in which they would frequently put their heads together, as though chatting about their new quarters, or some other interesting subject It being a question in the naturalist's mind whether they were really talking or not, he hit on the expedient of murdering one of their number to see if the others would run and tell what had happened. He says: "The eve-witness es of the murder hastened away and laid their heads together with every ant they met, whereupon all would turn and scamper away. . . . No more ants passed along that path during the

GUNPOWDER IN EARLY DAYS

Was Possibly Used in Warfare Before the Beginning of History. People outside of military life who have no connection with the making or gunpowder know it only as a coarse three simple and well-known substances, no one of which will explode, although two will burn, says Lieut. John M. Ellicott in St. Nicholas, Nobody knows when or how it was discovered, for as far back into the dark ages as records or tradition will carry us, we find that gunpowder, though not used day except Sunday. Shortest and cheap for guns, was known. It was, no doubt, est route to the interior. E. J. Slooum looked upon with awe and fear by the ancients on account of its flame, its noise, and its rending force; but their limited mechanical skill could suggest very little use for it.

Possibly it was used in warfare long before the beginning of history; but the first man in historical times to form an idea of the terrible destruction which this awful, bursting, fiery substance might produce was an English monk named Roger Bacon. Monks, in his day, were the chemists, scholars and writers of the world; and this Roger develop what he learned from others. He probably saw gunpowder among Moors in Spain, and tried for himself its explosive effect. Then he wrote of its composition in the year 1267, and in his writing suggested that it could be used in engines of war to deal death and destruction to armies of men. Soon after Roger Bacon's time his were constructed first by binding iron | price of the subscription bars together with hoops to form a tube, then by easting a tube out of the muzzles of the guns, the stones being rolled in after it. In spite of these drawbacks very large guns were bu'lt, for there was one used by Mahomet II. cleaning up his herd of the roughbreds. against the Greeks at the siege of Constantinople in 1453 which threw a stone weighing 600 pounds a distance of one

Some believe that the paper bearing the word Telegraphe was an early issue of the Boston Daily Telegraph, which preserved in the Harvard college brary as far back as 1824. The typography of the papers is in the style of the period of their publication, and quite representative in the matter of advertisements of the early business life and conditions in Boston. OLDEST KNOWN BIRD.

Prof. F. G. Secley Tells of It in a Recent

"The Solenhofen slate of Bavaria," writes Prof. H. G. Seely in his recent little volume, "The Story of the Earth in Past Ages," "makes known numerous insects and other forms of terrestrial life of this period, including the oldest known bird. "A bird is known by its feathers; though there is no reason why the covering to the skin should not be as varicelling prevails, when the liver is torpid able in this group of animals as among reptiles or mammals. It is, therefore. remarkable that the oldest-known bird, the archaeopteryx, has feathers as well developed as in the existing representatives of the class and similarly arranged. The animal is an elegant, slender bird, which is chiefly remarkable for showing teeth in the jaws. About 12, short and conical, occur on each side of the upper jaw.

"The bird was larger than the robin in its body and had a tail of which there was a bony core some six inches in length. The wings were quite as well developed as the legs and there are some evidences that the former could be applied to the ground as are the fore legs of quadrupeds, although the feathers show the wings to have been constructed on the same plan as the birds of to-unv. "The Solenhofen stone, in which so many of the remains of fishes, reptiles and insects are found, is the same as that used for lithographic purposes, being of exceeding close texture and of remarkable smoothness when prepared for its work."

SHE WAS SHY ONE TURK. Protest of an Audience Against Bernhardt's Loss of a Servant.

Sarah Bernhardt was once playing at Marseilles in a spectacular play in which she made her entree accompanied by six Turkish slaves. A line on the programme announced that these six Turks would accompany Mme. Bernhardt, but when the time came for them to go on one of the youngsters had disappeared. Sarah mustered the five in order, says the New York Evening Sun, and made her entrance with a grand flourish. The house was crowded, but not a handelap greeted her as she appeared. Then a still, small voice in the gallery murmured something in an indignant tone. Fifty voices immediately took up the strain, and in ten seconds more the whole house was shouting the same phrase. Bernhardt strained every nerve to catch what they were complaining about. She knew the phrase began with "Manque," but the rest of was lost in the general hubbub. For a full minute the tumult continued. Then Sarah, muttering things below her breath, rushed like a fury down to the footlights. In the front row the actress had spotted one man who was not taking part in the hullabaloo, Pointing at him, the actress excla med. sternly: "You seem to be the only sensible person in this house. Tell me what on earth they are kicking up this row for?" The man rose, bowed to the actress, and remarked, in very bad American-French: "Madam, you are shy one Turk."

DISINFECTION OF THE SKIN. the Impurities.

The New York Herald's European edition reports some interesting experinents of M. Lauenstein, a Hamburg physisian, upon the disinfection of the It is generally supposed that a little oap and water will remove all impuriies from the skin. But these experiments of M. Lauenstein prove that it is y no means easy to disinfect it, even by minute washings and the most severe antiseptic applications." In 147 operations he first removed a small piece of epidermis; 23 of these cases had merely been washed with water, whereas the remaining 124 had had the operative field dis nfected with ther, alcohol and solutions of subimate of chlorine. The little pieces of skin taken from the latter and tested by the usual methods of culture were found to be exempt from germs in 49

The practical conclusion to be drawn from these experiments is that disinfecion of the skin is difficult to realize that a quantity of baths must be given and that too many precautions cannot be taken and no detail is superfluous.

As regards hospital practice M. Lauen stein's experiments show that it is far preferable not to operate on patients as oon as they are admitted, but only when they have been subjected to repeated and thorough cleaning and disinfection. For greater security it is advised to have a series of washings with soap and of frictions with alcohol, ether, corbolic acid and sublimate, the portion of the body to be treated being protected during each seance by a fresh antiagainst fresh microbian contamination.

There is one peculiarity of Kipling's work, says a writer in McClure's Magazine, which I really must mentionnamely, the amount of ink he used to throw about. In the heat of summer, white cotton trousers and a thin vest constituted his office attire, and by the day's end he was spotted all over l'ke 7 o'cloc , a. m., Tuesdays, Thursdays, a Dalmation dog. He had a habit of dipping his pen frequently and deep m., Mordays, Wednesdays and Fridays, into the inkpot, and as all his move Will make connection with branch train ments were abrupt, almost jerky, the ink used to fly. When he darted into my room, as he used to do about one thing or another in connection with the contents of the paper a dozen times in the morning, I had to shout to h'm o "stand off;" otherwise, as I knew by experience, the abrupt halt he would make and the flourish with which he placed the proof in his hand before me, would send the penful of inh-he always had a full pen in his hand-flying Di over me. Driving or sometimes walking home to breakfast in his light attire plentifully beaprinkled with ink, trees and garden, and the buildings are his spectacked face peeping out under an enormous murhroom-shaped pith hat. Ki-ling was a quaint-looking oblect. That was in hot weather, when Labore lay blistering month after month under the sun, and every white woman and half of the white men had mith a few 6-ws, raise chickens, etc., I have a flos proposition to offer one.
