OCTOBER WEATHER.

Rheumatism Just Now to be Feared.

People Catch Cold and Suffer With the Prevalent Malady.

Mr. S. E. Chase's Experience—Very Simple Remedy He Used.

Rheumatism is growing more and more prevalent here. And neuralgia adds its tortures to the disease that is making life a burden to many in Heppner.

The cold, wet weather, the carelessness about getting wet, or perhaps some indiscretion in the diet, result in the agonizing rheumatism. One part of the system is attacked after another, and sometimes the vital organs yield to it, so that the increased mortality rate of October is chiefly due to this disease and its complications.

The methods of treatment are as different and widely varying as there are physicians, but nothing has yet been discovered that begins to equal the simple remedy used by S. E. Chase, a well-known G. A. R. man of Waltham, Mass. He is an old soldier, nearly seventy years of age, and was all run down with chronic rheumatism, liver complaint, and heart disease.

The Southern Pacific railroad company has decided to sell tickets from all stations on its lines in Oregon, at one fare for the round trip. In view of the fact that our people have been favored with abundant crops, it is confidently expected that the state fair at Salem will have a better attendance than ever before, and in order to give all an opportunity to visit this great institution of which the people of the entire state have reason to be proud, this popular line of railroads has reduced the fare so as to enable all to see one of the grandest displays ever exhibited at Salem. The Fair opens Sept. 30th and closes Oct. 15th.

NEW USE FOR CATS. Here is a Man Who Extracts Electricity to Run a Factory.

"I had a large cork and bung factory in Grand avenue, and I needed power to run my machinery," writes a Milwaukeean in Harper's Weekly. "You know, of course, that there is an immense amount of stored up electricity in a cat. The problem for inventors has been to invent a way to extract it profitably. In the rear of my factory I constructed a one-story circular building, some sixty feet in diameter. On the floor of this I coiled a glass pipe six inches in diameter. The first coil ran around the outside of the room, the coils gradually growing smaller, till at last, in the center, it was no larger than a table. It gave me something like a mile of pipe. The top and sides of this pipe were lined with rather stiff hair brushes, the bristles being a little more than an inch in length.

"At that time Milwaukee was over-run with cats. It was impossible to sleep nights. I put a notice in the paper that I would pay ten cents a dozen for prime cats, delivered at my factory. I got sixty dozen the first day and stored them in the basement of the power-house. The motor operated thus: Placing in the outer end of the glass pipe an imitation rat made of rubber and propelled by a small interior storage battery, I would then adjust a cat immediately behind it. The rubber rat would start off at a terrific rate—it was made to go through the mile of tubing in from two to three minutes—and the cat, of course, followed furiously, thinking to catch the supposed animal throughout the entire distance. Gentlemen, it was exciting to watch a healthy, active cat whip about those spirals, with the mechanical rat about a foot ahead and going like a cannon ball. The cat's back and sides rubbed against the brushes and her electricity was thus extracted. With a storage battery, and by sending a cat through every five minutes, I generated enough electricity to operate my entire plant, light my factory and sell power to run neighboring passenger elevators and small machinery. It also took the yowl out of the cats and gradually the city became quiet. At the end of a week a cat could be caught and used again."
