Swinging along in their brave array, While the cynic smiled his smile of gall-They're babies out for a holiday, They're only tin soldiers, that is all.' From the lakes to the Gulf the war drum beats,

While the bugle sounds for the call to death, And men surge thick in the city's streets. While their cheeks burn hot with the wa god's breath, For the blood mounts high in the fevered vein

At the call to arms for a righteous blow; Though the field shows red where the war go

Yet the same tin soldier is the first to go. In the sullen roar of the cannonade, 'Mid bursting bombs and the shrick of shell, As gallant a charge as was ever made

Through the flame-lit pit of a flaring hell; fowed as the forest before the fire, The bulldog merged in his master, man, On with a courage that cannot tire-

The alleged tin soldier is in the van. The ghostly beams of the moon shine down On a ghastly heap of the mangled slain, and it lights a face that is strong and brown, And a shattered form that held soul and brain; And the all that is left of that splendld whole Touched by the moon in the midnight sky, Tells at the morning's muster roll

That the brave tin soldiers knew how to die
