WASHINGTON LETTER.

Visit to the Arlington Cemetery.

Some of the Grand Sights to be Seen There, Where the Nation's Dead Lie Under the Care of Loving Friends.

(Special Correspondence to the Gazette.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 29.— Never was the breath of spring more welcome to any community than to this at the national capital at the present time. Washington has no memory of as disagreeable a season as the winter now passed.
The green grass is already freshening the numerous parks and grounds, and soon the bordering trees on every street and avenue will put forth verdure and bloom to make life and nature beautiful.

This is the foreground, the dome miles beyond, create and perfect a perspective that requires no comparison; for, near and far, it includes the swaying river and its varied outlines, and public monuments that represent the greatness of our republic. Around us—beneath the grandest oaks, maples, chestnuts and sycamore earth knows—are the graves of the nation's dead. Sometimes sculptured stone will tell where rest the greatest warriors of their time; "Storied urn and monumental bust" are on the one hand, and on the other the silent head-stones tell the never-to-be-forgotten story of the battle fields of the republic.

One of the officer's residences, on the Fort Meyer parade, is the home of Lieut. Brooks, son of Quincy A. Brooks, for half a century an Oregon friend of the writer. On that Sabbath day the family had just received a message that he would be with them by the evening train; for he had for a year been in the campaigns of Cuba. Of late on the staff of General Wood, at Santiago.

We visited Mrs. Brooks when returning from Arlington, to find her in this delightful expectancy.
The children were also excited at the prospect of their father's homecoming. One can easily imagine how glad a home-coming that would be. Since last spring Lieut.
Brooks has been in the thick of battle and the front of war; every battle fought had caused intense solicitude; every mail that came it was feared would be the harbinger of ill-tidings; all those weary months that devoted wife and mother had been tortured by the anxieties that in time of war attend the soldier's wife.

hour it was beside the door. There was a splendid team and in half an hour they had traversed the almost five miles distance from the fort parade to the capitol. The B. & O. Depot is only one block distant and my own home was between the two. We thought that if all soldiers' wives were made of such Spartan motherhood as we witnessed, it was fortunate for the sons of Mars and their families.

This morning we had another exposition of womanhood in the person of Mrs. Dr. Mary Walker, who visited the land office on a matter of business that involved both her profession as a lawyer and also a doctor. One cannot easily have full confidence in this noted woman; that is, in her womanliness and perfect sanity as well. She was attired in masculine array, her hair was cut short in the neck; she wore a rather gentlemanly outfit, and, but for her voice, would have passed for a man. She discussed her qualifications as a medical student, with diploma to show; as a legal mind, also equipped for performance.
In this dual capacity the distinguished lady of medicine demanded that a refusal to grant a pension should be reopened. There are some who champion the cause of woman without surrendering the most charming attributes of the sex; there are some who claim too much to please fastidious tastes, yet they leave us room to believe that they deserve commendations and appreciations. But Mrs. Mary Walker, who has all the professions at command, leaves those so unfortunate as to meet her, with the unpleasant sensation that we have met a woman who has unsexed herself, and would like to unsex all her kind.

Congress has wandered away, but spring has come in its place.
War is far away as the Philippines, and it is unpleasant to read the news that two score Oregon boys are included in the list of casualties. But those Oregon boys are known, the world over, as heroes and we can well be proud of them. They were from the cream of Oregon's manhood. It is well enough that our country should know that Oregon has more of the stuff that heroes are made of to offer when our country has need of men.

In my next I shall endeavor to give some pictures of life in the departments. Oregon has one of her best known sons in charge of what may be considered the most important of all the departments —the general land office. There is much in Washington life and surroundings that will be of interest to the people. We are a long way from the capital but are as much interested as any in knowing how public business is conducted.

With the advent of spring there will be much to tell that has general interest for the people at large. There are many features of life and people here that are different from other cities of this nation. The colored folks here are worth showing up in their peculiar ways. The house in which I live is one of the historic edifices of this nation as well of Washington. S. A. CLARKE.

The Chicago Sheep Market.

The Drovers' Commission company, in their report to the Chicago Evening Post of the 31st ult., has the following to say in regard to sheep: "There has been a good strong undertone to the sheep trade this week and the high prices of last week have been fully maintained the only notable advance being on clipped lamb and sheep and choice spring lamb. Our sales today include clipped lamb at $5.12; clipped ewes, $4.15.
One spring lamb, weighing 20 pounds, at $20 per 100, the highest price of the season. Present prices are certainly making shippers good money and we believe it a good time to market all the fat sheep and lambs on hand. Top-wooled Colorado lambs have sold up to $4.90, with fair to good natives $5.40@5.75.
Best grades of sheep have sold at $5.
Bulk of woolled natives, $4.50@4.80.
Clipped lambs reached 5 1/4c, with clipped sheep, $4.25@4.75.

Stop that cough! Take warning. It may lead to consumption. A 25c bottle of Shillo's Cure may save your life.
Sold by Conser & Warren.
