Fred Waite Brings Word of a General Con fiagration at That Place.

Fred Waite came home today from s trip into Crook county, and brings word of a serious fire at Mitchell, last Friday, in which one-half the town was burned. and the loss runs into several thousand dollars. The fire started in an old barn, where it is supposed some children were playing with matches. At first it was feared that the fire was incendiary, but this impression has been removed.

Ten to twelve buildings were destroyed, of which four or five were stores, one a hotel, one a livery stable and some saloons. The news was slow in coming out. Mitchell is about 120 miles from the Columbia river, which is the nearest railroad point, and intelligence reaches the outside world slowly.

A HAPPY COUPLE.

They Were Indians but They Were Happy as Lovers.

Once I saw a pretty thing, a young bride, of the Kickapoos, on a sort of a wedding trip. She was tall and slight, and-so closely do the members of the tribe resemble one another-she looked like the twin sister of her young husband. At first they were accompanied by a stout old chief, but he left after circus day. The bride and bridegroom spent three or four days in the town, wandering about as unconsciously as Adam and Eve in the garden. The man was already masterful and protecing, the girl shy and subservient. Day after day they walked hand in hand, looking at everything, people, shops, cattle, but never speaking to any one, never even to each other, yet deeply content in the consiousness of companionship. They were a living example of the happiness of simplicity, and while many a civilized man and woman think on time. of how far their own conduct as wives Oregonian.

THE BOY WHO WILL NEVER COME.

(Written by Rev. P. S. Knight,) I hear a chorous of ringing bells In echoing tower and dome, And word is passed by a thousand tongues

That our boys are marching home. But one mother watches the marching line That steps to the rolling drum, And covers her eyes and sheds hot tears

For a boy who will never come. A father stands in an open field And leans on his resting plow, With toil-worn hands and wrinkled face,

And grayhairs on his brow. In silence he sees the column pass, His quivering lips are dumb-

But his heart responds with a broken sigh For a boy who will never come. Two little children, hand in hand,

Walk down the crowded street, And scan each face in the line that steps. To the Snare-drum's measured beat;-But they look in vain for a brother's face. Whom they long to welcome home, And two children's hearts are filled with grie

For a boy who will never come. A maiden sits in a mourner's garb In the shade of a darkened room, And hears the music of martial bands And the welcoming cannon's boom,

In truth she wishes her country well As it welcomes its warriors home; But her sad young heart beats a funeral dirge

For a boy who will never come. O, I blame you not, ye who join the throng That surges the crowed streets, With welcoming hand and shout and song The returning brave to greet.

But I am thinking of hearts that bleed In many a sorrowing home, And so weave my wreath of simple rhyme For the boy who will never come Salem Or., August 9.

Abandons Politics.

Maryellen Lease has abondoned politics The path was too thorny. And what is more surprising is her statement that all those flery philippies which she was wont to hurl at "octo puses" (or octupi), the grasping, greedy, grinding money power," etc., were merely skillfully worded ads, with a view to qualifying her for some profession in which the "primal curse" of manual labor involved in the wrestling with pots and pans and washtubs might be avoided. In other words, the confession is made that all this time she has been talking through her sunconnet in a Pickwickian sense to the honest open-mouthed grangers. Accompanying this renunciation of politics is the announcement that she is open for an engagement as pastor or opportunity of visiting this wonderful pastoress of an evangelic church in some Eastern city. It is not said that the too-long-ne glected Mr. Maryellen will go along, in case she receives a call, but presumably he will, as he can be made useful in pumping the organ at Sunday service.
