Quite a few Columbia river Indians in showy blankets have been in Heppner this week selling the first wool of The lecture given by Joaquin Miller the season. They bring it in wheat after paying all expenses netted the sacks, and last year sold over $3000 worth in Heppner. They secure their wool without the expense of keeping sheep. There being 200,000 sheep in Morrow county, a fair percentage of them naturally drop dead around over the big range. The Indians ride all over the county and discover the dead sheep and pull the wool. The riper the sheep the easier it is to pull the wool, and the stronger the smell.
