WASTED WEALTH.

The taxpayers of Oregon have had a good deal of their hard cash appropriated in the name of the wild game of the State and its supposed protection.

Legislatures have had to use much of their high-priced time in the rich range of the Greenhorn, nal. He was raised in the picturesque Waldo Hills, east from Salem, and when only half his present length of 6 feet began drawing funny pictures on the barn door of his dad Tim hoeing corn and resting simultaneously.

Homer's genius has come to be recognized the world over, and while at the further end of the continent he never fails to get in a good word for Oregon.

JOYOUS SPRING.

Crocuses are coming on in Heppner gardens, and soon suspicions of emerald green will be seen increasing along the brushy bottoms of the krix, the wild flowers will be blooming, the birds singing, the lambs skipping, and all nature will be rejoicing at the return of spring throughout the Heppner Hills.

LITERARY.

That Environments have less to do with a man's circumstances in life than his character was successfully proven at the debate given by the H. L. and D. Society last Friday evening. The victors were Jas. Hart and A. G. Bartholomew and the victims B. B. Kelley and J. W. Shipley. Besides the debate an interesting program was rendered, most commendable parts being the recitations given by Miss Lillian Bisbee and J. B. Beal.
