Mrs. Pinkham Tells How Ordinary Tasks Produce Displacements.
Apparently trifling incidents in woman's daily life frequently produce displacements of the womb. A slip on the stairs, lifting during menstruation, standing at a counter, running a sewing machine, or attending to the most ordinary tasks may result in displacements, and a train of serious evils is started. The first indication is back trouble, and should be the signal for quick action. Don't let the condition become chronic through neglect or a mistaken idea that you can overcome it by exercise or leaving it alone.

Where Rain Falls Heaviest, Snow Lies Thickest and Thunder and Lightning Exhibit the Greatest Violence.

The climax came on a Sunday evening two summers ago, says the Chicago Tribune.

After a hot day a violent thunder-storm broke. Then there appeared in the west an inky cloud, from which hung four long, twisting black columns.

Suddenly, just after six o'clock, a wall of water came roaring down the hillside above the village. When it struck the upper end of the street it was several feet high. In a twinkling it had demolished a number of houses, and torn partitions from others, and swept away everything in its path. What was left was so plastered with mud and earth as to be almost useless.

No one was killed, but the destruction of domestic animals, of houses, property and roads was complete. Gardens and grazing lands were ruined. Even the parish well was utterly choked with mud and dead animals.

Southbourne-on-Sea, four miles on the east of Bournemouth, has far better air than the latter town, and looks as if it ought to be just the site for a health resort. Tens of thousands have been spent in the effort to make it so, yet nature had said no, and man's efforts have proved unavailing.

A handsome pier was built, supported on the shore by immense cement walls. The pier is now only approached by a single plank. Its concrete supports are gone, and it is the resort only of two or three fishermen. The cement wall looks like a wave-eaten cliff. Further along the shore a narrow row of houses was built in a great recess, cut back at vast expense in the cliff. The sea cut in below them, and the owner was forced to raze them and carry the material away.

There is no great city in Europe which nature so evidently wishes to be rid of as St. Petersburg. Built in the first place on a howling swamp which was filled in at a cost of hundreds of lives and hundreds of thousands of pounds, fevers reduced its population and gave it a death rate higher than any other European capital. Failing so to oust its builders, nature used a new weapon. The ice came down in spring out of Lake Ladoga and, piling against the new wharves and bridges, dammed the Neva and flooded the city. Every spring saw repetition of these disastrous floods which, even after they dried away, left the streets mere quagmires. The St. Petersburgers now defeat the flood by setting to work thousands of men at the first spring thaw, who cut an blast the river ice, and leave free passages for the lake ice to sail down stream unhindered.

Yet still the struggle goes on. For some years past it has been apparent that St. Petersburg is becoming a city of toothless people. Dentists ascribe this curious fact to the effluvia from the rotten vegetation deep buried under the new suburbs of the city. So serious is the matter becoming that there is a strong agitation in favor of once more removing the capital of Russia to some other site.

Russia has another town against natural forces are waging a terrible war. This is Schemacha, in the Caucasus. When Schemacha was founded it was for long impossible to get a supply of drinking water. The difficulty was overcome by bringing water from a distance. Next came a series of terrible epidemics—first smallpox, then cholera, and then smallpox again. Yet the city grew, helped to prosperity by the petroleum trade, and began the year with 35,000 people.

In February last the town was humming with industry, when one dull but warm morning came suddenly a terrific crash of thunder. The solid ground began to vibrate. A few seconds later there was a horrible cracking sound and the whole of the Mohammedan quarter was thrust upwards bubble-like, till its houses were reared high upon a hill. The bubble burst, and instead of a town there lay a formless heap of ruins, from which red flames leaped and crackled toward the gigantic pall of dust which hid the sky.

Within a week Schemmacha's survivors determined to rebuild their ruined city. They had hardly reached the decision when once more the ground began to tremble and the night sky grew red with flame. News came that a new volcano had burst out in the mountains nearby. No plainer warning

A Wisconsin Group of Immediate Relatives Which Numbers 188 Members.

Prairie Du Chien, Wis., boasts of a family which is believed to be the largest in the United States. It consists of 188 members, and until a few weeks ago, when Mrs. Peter Fernet died, there had been no sickness or death in the family for nearly half a century, reports the Washington Times.

Peter Fernett, Sr., the head of the family, is nearly 90 years of age and is in splendid health. With him to mourn the loss of a faithful wife and mother are eight children, 12 grandchildren, 61 great-grandchildren and one great-great-grandchild. The family now consists of the following members:

Peter Fernett, husband; Mrs. Anthony La Bonne, Mrs. Louis La Bonne, Mrs. Frank Porrier, Mrs. Cota, Mrs. Theodore Cota, Mrs. Hubert Obin, Paul Fernett and Peter Fernett, Jr.

There were four other children born, but three of these died when they were quite young, and the other when he was under 21 years of age.

These eight children are the parents of 126 children. Eighteen of these grandchildren of old Mr. and Mrs. Fennett have among them 6 children, and one of the latter is the mother of a ten-day old child, making it a great-great-grandchild of Peter Fennett, Sr. The remarkable record of the Fennett children is as follows:

Mrs. A. La Bonne, 18 children.
Mrs. L. La Bonne, 13 children.
Mrs. F. Porrier, 17 children.
Mrs. Cota, 16 children.
Mrs. T. Cota, 17 children.
Mrs. H. Olin, 18 children.
Paul Fernet, 13 children.
Peter Fernet, Jr., 14 children.

A Task That Will Take Two Green wisk Clerks Three Years to Complete.

Two clerks at the observatory at Greenwich are essaying the extraordinary task of counting the stars. They are attempting in all seriousness a feat which has always been used satirically to typify the impossible. So far they have counted 212,507 stars which, if astronomical calculations be correct, is about one-fiftieth of the total number to be found in the firmament, states the Philadelphia North American.

The method of the tabulation, is new evidence of the far-reaching scientific possibilities of photography. The enumerators do not sit out in the starlight, and strive to count the infinitesimal spots of light outlined against the blue background. Instead, they have made a great photographic chart of the heavens. This chart consists of a number of plates exposed at different times in order to get all the planets and heavenly bodies.

After the entire chart was complete the two astronomers began the work of counting with the aid of microscopes. It is estimated that before the task is completed some three years must elapse, for to insure accuracy the greatest care must be exercised, and any attempt at speed is out of question.

small dose of cocaine, drink the mixture and in ten minutes you will find yourself in the mental and nervous condition which is the normal state of the citizen of Butte, Mont." says the Boston Transcript. Men work in the mines and smelters in three eight-hour shifts, and the stores, restaurants, theaters, etc., are regulated accordingly. So the life of Butte is literally a "continuous performance." There is no distinction between night and day. It is glare and lustre all the time, and there are no old men in Butte.
