ENGLAND IS PREPARING
Great Britain Orders War Ships to Red Sea.
FLEETS BEING MOBILIZED
The Admiralty Has the Excuse That it is Getting Ready for Practice Maneuvers.
London, July 18.—Two naval orders were issued today by the British Admiralty, which are believed to indicate a determination on the part of Great Britain to protect British shipping from acts of aggression at the hands of the Russian navy.
The first order directs the Mediterranean fleet to sail at once from Gibraltar and proceed to Alexandria, Egypt, near the mouth of the Suez canal.
The second order directs two of the fastest British armored cruisers to proceed through the canal and take up stations in the Red Sea at points where several British ships have been held up the last few days by the vessels of the Russian volunteer squadron.
While the fact that these orders were issued was carefully guarded, and no public statement of their scope is procurable, there is no doubt that the British Foreign Office has decided that the time has come to act promptly in protecting British shipping, and to put an end to any aggression on the part of the Russian cruisers. Well informed naval officers believe that the dispatch of this powerful Mediterranean fleet to the vicinity of the Red Sea, and the stationing of two of the crack vessels of the squadron directly at the points where the Russians are carrying things with a high hand, means that no further molestation of vessels flying the British flag will be permitted.
From a secret, but unimpeachable source, it can be stated that not only is Great Britain to be represented by a strong force at the Red Sea, but plans are now being carried out which will bring together in home waters an enormous fleet of vessels of war. The home and channel fleets are being mobilized at Portland and Torquay, and are being brought up to battle strength by the addition of ships from the reserves. While to all intents and purposes the nation is preparing for war, the Admiralty has the excuse that it is getting the fleets ready for the practice maneuvers, and it simply happens that this mobilization comes at this time.

Columbia Yields Beautiful Gems.
A new and valuable industry may be started along the lower Columbia river, which will be that of gathering and polishing precious stones. For some time past Mr. Albright, who is now foreman in the Star brewery in Vancouver, has occupied his spare moments in gathering peculiar-looking pebbles along the Columbia river in and near Vancouver. Mr. Albright is not a professional lapidary, but he took upon himself the task of grinding and finishing several of the specimens he found and while there are many in his possession that are not as valuable as the owner might wish, still he has a very large collection of the most valuable gems of this character that can be found anywhere on the globe.
These stones have been submitted in their finished state to reputable lapidaries and jewelers, who have pronounced them to be gems of great value. In his collection he has several fine opals, amethysts, fresh water pearls, garnets and the like. Many of the gems have been mounted. Some of these he still has in his possession, and many valuable specimens he has sold at a good profit.
For years many persons and companies have contemplated dredging the Columbia river for the purpose of extracting gold from the sands, and many companies have been organized with this object in view. This has been deemed feasible, and is still being considered by several Minneapolis companies.
This gold excitement has perhaps caused the overlooking of other valuable industries that might be carried on with profit in this portion of the country and these accidents and frequent finds of Mr. Albright's has resulted in several experienced lapidaries arranging to investigate the shores of the Columbia river, and if their expectations are realized a very profitable industry will be no doubt commenced in the near future.
