WADE HOME AGAIN.

Pendleton Cashier Returns After Year's Absence.

Pendleton, Or., Jan. 21.—After exactly one year's absence, C. B. Wade, the defaulting cashier of the First National Bank, of Pendleton, has returned to the city. While it is generally believed that Wade came back at the solicitation of his wife, it is understood that his return was hastened upon the request of the District Attorney, who issued a warrant for his arrest several months ago.

Pleadings of intimate friends and the action of the bank in settling a large portion of the cashier's accounts, amounting to over $60,000, are said to be the cause of his nonreturn. Wade's physique is almost wrecked, and only intimate friends are permitted to see him. Colonel J. H. Raley, his attorney, tonight said: "Mr. Wade came back at the request of friends and persons interested in clearing up the financial trouble which he became involved a year ago. His creditors have, for the most part, been reimbursed, and no action will be taken against him. His return at this time is simply to settle his financial dealings amicably."

Wade was adjudged a bankrupt April 8, 1904, with liabilities of $139,414, and assets nearly $60,000. His personal property was appraised at $15,493 and his real property at $44,500. He owned many shares in the Golconda and other mining property, which were considered almost valueless as assets. The proceeds of the sale of his property were but a small item in paying off his indebtedness, but the First National Bank came to the rescue of his creditors by settling with the heaviest losers. Wade was absent from Pendleton a year to the very day. He spent part of the time in Honolulu, but returned last Summer to California, where he remained until this week.
