NO ROOM FOR COMPLAINT.

The recent ruling of the federal authorities in which all sheep must be dipped prior to shipment is causing some discontent among Morrow county sheepmen.

A little inquiry and investigation reveals the fact that the ruling is based on good judgment and will ultimately result in benefit to the sheep industry in the state of Oregon.

For several years the states of Idaho, Wyoming and Montana have had in force very stringent laws against the spread of scabies. The results are that these states have made good headway in stamping out a disease that is a great menace to the sheep industry. The state of Oregon has been somewhat careless on this very important matter to the sheep business. Very little headway has been made against the ravages of scabies in this state. This condition of affairs has caused just protest from our neighbor states, where they feel that they should have protection when they are doing all that they can to get rid of a disease that is causing much injury to their business.

The matter has gone so far that the states that are protected by good laws have built a wall in the shape of a quarantine against Oregon sheep. No better conclusion nor remedy could be reached for the difficulty than the fact that these objections have been withdrawn on condition that the federal inspectors cause all sheep to be dipped prior to shipment from this state.

In Montana which has more sheep than any other state in the union, very little scab exists. This desirable state of affairs was brought about only through the enforcement of proper laws which were gotten up and backed up by sheepmen themselves.

At the last session of the Idaho legislature a law was passed making it compulsory to dip all sheep before leaving the winter ranges. This law also requires that this dipping must be done under state supervision in order to accomplish thorough work.

If Oregon sheepmen would take similar steps, scabies would soon begin to disappear.

There is no room for complaint over the action of the government in this matter. It is a condition that must be met and cannot bring anything but beneficial results to an important industry. Under the circumstances the man who owns sheep not infected can well afford to dip, while the grower who has sheep infected with scabies should be compelled to.

Morrow county will have plenty of space in a good location at the Lewis and Clark fair. It is up to the pride of our citizens to see that this space is properly filled. We have plenty of material to make a showing that will attract attention among the best in the state.

New that the shearing season is here, the wool growers should save out some of the finest fleeces for Morrow county's exhibit at the Lewis and Clark fair. We ought to have the best wool exhibit there.

Morrow county produces more wealth per capita than any other county in the state of Oregon. Put this in big black letters at the Lewis and Clark fair.
