Hall-Adkins.
A quiet but pretty wedding occurred at the home of J. J.
Adkins, Wednesday morning November 7th at 7 o'clock.

Mr. Charles M. Hall and Miss Olive Adkins were the contracting parties. Rev. Joseph Baie, performed the beautiful ceremony of the M. E. church South ritual in a very impressive manner.

Only the members of the immediate family were present. The happy couple were the recipients of many useful and beautiful presents.

The occasion of this wedding was unique owing to the fact that this is the thirty first anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs.
J. J. Adkins, and the thirtieth birthday of their oldest daughter, Mrs. W. C. Howard.

Mr. Hall is the foreman of the Elarn Hardware Co., of Milton, Oregon and is well and favorably known in that city.

Miss Adkins is well known in Heppner, having been born and raised here. She received her education here and at Columbia College, Milton, where she graduated from the academic department.

Beside the immediate members of the family, Dr. J. E. Adkins, of Hillsboro, and Mrs. F. C. Adkins of this city were present.

The happy couple left on the morning train for Milton.

For 157 years the University of Pennsylvania has not been a co-educational institution, but beginning January 1, next, women will be admitted to all its educational advantages.

J. Christian Eskilson of Chicago, supreme treasurer of the Danish Brotherhood of America, is missing, and simultaneously between $40,000 and $50,000 of the order's funds has disappeared.

DEFENDS JUTE MILL
Keady Declares It Would Make Penitentiary Self-Sustaining

W. P. Keady, father of the jute mill agitation and legislation, who is at present working upon the draft of a jute mill bill for presentation to the legislature, takes exception to the attitude of the governor and of the members of the legislature who recently visited Pendleton and Walla Walla while investigating the jute mill question.

Mr. Keady is emphatic in his argument that the jute mill is the true & only settlement of the prison labor question, alleging that it is the only form of employment which will take the convict out of competition with the free labor of the state. He also argues that a jute mill would do more toward making the state prison self-supporting than any other arrangement that could be made.

"According to the figures quoted at the investigation made at Walla Walla," Mr. Keady said this morning, "it was shown that it was possible for the Walla Walla prison to manufacture bags for 5.42 cents, even after the price of raw material had been doubled by the so-called trust in India. It would be possible for Oregon to produce bags at less cost than this on account of the difference in freight between Portland and Salem and Portland and Walla Walla. Counting on the Washington basis, however, and selling the bags at a profit of 1 cent, an Oregon mill of 100 looms with a capacity of 3,000,000 bags would net the state $30,000 annually, which is twice the income resultant from the stove foundry.

"If again under the present conditions prison-made bags could be sold for 4 or 6 cents less than the market price it is safe to assume that any increase in the price of the raw material would still maintain the same ratio of cost to the consumer not existing, so that no matter what the trust might do with the raw material the farmers would be able to buy prison bags cheaper than trust-made bags, and this not taking into consideration the regulation which the prison bag output would exercise over the market. In all the history of the state the farmers have been paying more for grain bags than the state could have sold them for. It is a pertinent fact that throughout the agitation all people importing sacks have been very active in their opposition to the establishment of a jute mill at Salem.

"Convict labor would come into opposition to free labor whenever it is used for any purpose whatever outside the prison walls, whether on roads or what not," continued Mr. Keady. "And even in the manufacture of stoves it works in opposition to the laboring man. If the stove foundry at Salem was abolished then a foundry would be profitable outside, but not while the convicts mould stoves for 3 cents an hour to sell in the market in competition with those made by free labor.
The jute mill would absolutely destroy all competition and at the same time would go further toward making the penitentiary self-supporting.

"The penitentiary is now running at an annual loss of between $40,000 and $50,000," said Mr. Keady, turning to another phase of the subject. "It has no income except that from its foundry and its system of bookkeeping so pads out the income account as not to show by a very wide margin the real annual deficit of the institution. All the work done by convicts in repairing walls, in gardening, dairy work, road work, in all departments, is credited to the earning account while the prison gains nothing in income from the effort and continually has to expend money in maintenance. It is in reality dead labor and dead loss.

"With the stove foundry not more than 175 men are employed, while with a loom jute mill approximately 300 men would be given continual work, thus calling into requisition practically all of the convicts in the prison.

"This, however, is not a question of revenue only. It is a question of state good," said the speaker. "Even should the mill simply pay its way and sell sacks at cost it would not run the prison further behind than it is now running, while at the same time it would greatly and directly benefit the farmers."

Mr. Keady is much interested in the jute mill question and is preparing data for the consideration of the legislators prior to the real discussion of the proposed bill.—Oregon Journal.
