Try it, as it doesn't cost much to make, and is said to be absolutely harmless to the stomach.

Get the following harmless ingredients from any good pharmacy: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. M. x by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and again at bed time.

This simple mixture is said to give prompt relief, and there are very few cases of Rheumatism and Kidney troubles it will fail to cure permanently. These are all harmless every day drugs, and your druggist should keep them in the prescription department; if not, have him order them from the wholesale drug houses for you, rather than fail to use this, if you are afflicted,

Goin' to the Circus

[Copyright, 1905, by J. W. Muller.] Coming home from the village one afternoon with his horse and buggy, with the lines loose in his hand and his thoughts fixed on the hay crop, Jabez Parker suddenly ran across something to attract his attention.

Two miles from home and on a barn by the roadside two men were at work pasting up circus posters. They had the front of the barn pretty well covered, and they finished their work as Jabez sat and looked at them. There were lions, tigers, elephants, giraffes, galloping horses and what not, with a woman walking a tight rope and a clown making everybody laugh, and the good old man, who had never seen a circus in his life, even as a boy, sat there long after the men had departed and figured it all out in imagination. Presently he heard a voice saying:

"Durn my buttons, but I'm goin' to take in that circus or bust!"

It was his own voice, and it almost jumped him off the seat. His heart was in his mouth for a moment, but then he gained courage to say "getap" to the old horse and muttered to himself:

"Yes, sir, I'm nearly sixty years old and never saw a circus, but I'm goin' to begin now. I expect ma will make a terrible fuss over it, but I ain't goin' to let her turn me aside. I dunno what's come over me, but if it's wicked to go to a circus then I'm goin' to be wicked."

He reached home to unharness and go to work again, and he said nothing of what was in his mind until supper had been eaten and the milking done. Then as he sat on the piazza with his old wife he carelessly remarked:

"Ma, I see that George Williams' barn is all covered with circus pictures."

"And he a Christian man!" gasped the wife.

"Waal, you know, folks don't look at circuses the way they used to."

"What do you mean by that, Jabez?"

"Why, a circus ain't considered wicked. I dunno as they ever was wicked, but folks used to think that way."

"I don't want to hear you talkin' that way, Jabez. The circus was always wicked and always will be. It's one of the broad roads leadin' down to perdition."

"I've never seen a circus," said Jabez after awhile.

"And you never will—not as long as you live with me."

"I've often wondered where the wickedness comes in."

"Then you must be blind! Don't women, or things called women, dress up in short skirts and ride hossback and jump through hoops? Can you imagine anything more wicked than that?"

"What makes you call that wicked?"

"Because it is, and you know it, and there's no use to talk about it any more. I've lived with you for thirty-nine years, and I know you from head to heel. Jabez, was you thinkin' of goin' to that circus?"

"Kinder thinkin'."

"I had a feelin' in my bones that you was. Waal, you stop it. I won't have it for a minute."

"Say, ma, I'm a-goin'!"

"Jabez Parker!"

"Yes, sir, I'm a-goin'. I've never been to a circus, but I'm goin' to see one in before I die. I'm a-goin' to see the elephants, lions and tigers, and I'm a-goin' to see them women in short skirts. I don't believe it'll hurt me any more than to see a hoss race at the county fair."

"But I told you to turn your back when they raced."

"Yes, but I wanted to see which hoss came in ahead. I saw, and I don't believe I was one mite the wickeder for it."

"But a circus, Jabez—a circus! I tell you you can't go. If you do you needn't expect to find me here when you come home. I never could live with you for an hour ag'in."

Jabez Parker was the soul of good nature, but when aroused he had a streak of the mule in him. He had said he was going to the circus, and his wife's opposition only made him the more determined. The subject was dropped that evening and was hardly referred to during the next week. Then the date of the circus came along, and one morning Jabez said:

"Ma, I'll be home in time to do the milkin'!"

"What do you mean?"

"I'm goin' to town to see the circus."

The wife looked at him and saw that he was determined, and she said no more until he was ready to drive away. Then she observed:

"Goodby, Jabez. I don't 'spose we shall ever see each other ag'in."

He echoed her goodby and drove off, and she sat on the piazza and cried for an hour. She was still at it when some one drove up, and she looked up to see her minister standing before her. To his inquiry as to the cause of her sorrow she told her tale, and when it was finished he said:

"There's my wife and boys out in the carriage. Hurry up and get your Sunday clothes on."

"But what for?"

"We'll find room in the carriage for you, and I'll buy your circus ticket."

Jabez got home half an hour ahead of his wife. He was looking around the sitting room to see if she had left a note or anything, when she entered and said:

"Say, Jabez, I said 'twas wicked, but after seein' all the animals and the women in the short skirts and havin' all the peanuts and lemonade I could hold I have changed my mind. It ain't wicked a bit, and if you'll start that fire like a good man I'll have supper on the table in three shakes of a lamb's tail."
