

Wash Goods Special

The cold, backward Spring and Summer have not been very favorable for selling Sheer Wash Goods. We find we have too many left. You know our policy is never to carry seasonable goods over. Hence in goes the Knite for a final clearing.

Many odds and ends and broken lines have been left from the excessive selling during our Big Sale.

Many articles have become slightly soiled and mussed from having been too much admired. Now all of these will be segregated in various bargain lots and marked down at further price reductions as a fitting climax to our Big Sale.

As some of the lots are small let us urge you to come early.

HEPPNER A STOCK MARKET

Sales Foot up a Large Sum This Season.

That Heppner is a market place for the stock industry is borne out by the figures produced at the local stockyards and wool warehouses. This has been a backward year for stock of all kinds, as well as other products of the ranch, but for a town the size of Heppner it speaks well for it as a business center.

Business has been better in this town this Spring than any other town in the eastern part of the state.

This spring the sheep sales were considerably smaller than last year, owing to the fact that the price had shrunk all the way from 50 cents to a dollar on the head, and many sheepmen are holding their lambs for a later market or until next spring, when they think they will be able to get what they think they are worth.

The average price paid this Spring for sheep to go upon the ranges of Montana and Wyoming is $2.60 and that for the local mutton market of Troutdale and Portland was $3.25.

Since January 1, the Portland and Troutdale markets have consumed over 1000 head of mutton sheep, which have netted the growers $3250, and over 60,000 head to go upon the ranges netted the growers $156,000. The last train of sheep which left here the first of the week, for Montana, carried 500 head of bucks, which were sold at $7.50 each.

The sale of sheep alone has brought in to the hands of the growers of this locality $163,000, but this is not the only revenue derived.

Heppner will market a good 3,000,000 pounds of wool this season at an average price of 12 cents per pound, footing up in round figures $360,000, which brings the total receipts from the sheep business up to $523,000.

Heppner has shipped 2240 head of beef cattle at an average price of $45 per head, and over $5000 worth of horses have gone to other markets.

The result of the output of stock from this place has brought into the hands of the producers $636,080.

The figures given do not include blooded stock of any nature, but simply stock taken from the ranges and landed on the markets. There are numerous herds of blooded bucks in this county that would bring a far better price than $7.50, and the same is true of horses and cattle.

It is necessary for the stockmen of today to receive a larger price for his stock than it was a few years ago. The stockman now owns his own winter range, and his summer range is still furnished by the Government, but he must pay a grazing privilege, and these facts, coupled with the rise of land values, cuts into the profits of the grower.

Sheepmen have been more fortunate than any other class of stockmen during the past five or six years. Sheep have been on a gradual increase until this Spring, when the market slumped about 15 per cent and the price of wool dropped off from 4 to 8 cents per pound. However the growers are optimistic and figure that things will straighten out satisfactorily after the Presidential election this Fall.—Garfield Crawford is Sunday Oregonian.
