Latest oil news—The expected sharp advance in the price of oil has been postponed to a later date owing to the fact that John D. don't have to pay a small fine.

A stong effort is being put forth to secure the enactment of a new water code at the next session of the legislature. A bill was up at the last session of the legislature but was defeated by a narrow margin after a hard fight.

THORNLESS CACTUS.

The experiments with Burbanks Thornless Cactus in Eastern Oregon, and especially in Umatilla county, will be looked to with great interest.

The stories told of this new plant, and even what the Wizard Burbank himself says, while hard to believe, but coming from such a man as Luther Burbank, are worth at least consideration and investigation.

If half of the claims are true of the Thornless Cactus, all other forage plants will, in time give way to the great discovery.

During the past two years the United States department of agriculture has dispatched agents to all parts where cacti grow to look up this matter and last season gave some valuable information gathered from those who had for years been feeding the wild, thorny ones to their stock with good results when properly prepared by fire, though it is acknowledged that this prepared a portion of their nutritive value is lost and though the dangers of loss from feeding to stock are lessened, are not by any means safe, even by singing or any other process, while many of these new thornless ones are as safe to handle and as safe to feed as beets potatoes, carrots or pumpkins.

By actual weight in the summer of 1906 in the cool coast climate of Sonoma county, Cal., on heavy, black "adobe" soil, generally thought wholly unsuited for Cactus Burbank Opuntias produced the first year, six months from single rooted leaves, planted about June 1, an average of 4 1/2 pounds per plant on one-fourth acre, yielding at the distance planted (2 1/2 x 5 feet) at the rate of 180,230 pounds (over 90 tons) of forage per acre.

Some of the best varieties produced very much above the average, though planted much too closely for permanent field culture; yet these notes are of interest on a subject of which little has been known. These Opuntias are always expected to produce nearly or quite double as much feed the second and succeeding year as they do the first season of planting.

Mr. Burbank says that he would not expect one-fourth the above yield on desert soil without irrigation but would expect nearly or quite twice as much as the yield mentioned above in a very warm climate with one or two light irrigations each season.

These improved Opuntias must of course be fenced from stock; the leaves to be fed to the stock when most needed, and in countries where great numbers of valuable stock are lost in times of unusual drought will be of inestimable value and will also, without doubt, prove of great value in less arid countries as a common farm or orchard crop even on the best agricultural soils but more especially on barren, rocky, hill and mountain sides and gravelly river beds which are now of no use whatever.

The small, hard, wild thorny cactus has been a common everyday food for horses, camels, mules, oxen growing and beef stock, dairy cows pigs and poultry for more than 50 years, though millions have died from the thorns, yet, no systematic work for their improvement had been taken up until some 15 years ago; now agriculturists and horticulturists in every land are deeply interested and the governments of many countries are taking measures to secure a stock of the improved Opuntias to avoid if possible the too common occurrence of famines for the Opuntias can remain uncultivated and undisturbed year after year, constantly increasing in size and weight until needed; then each acre will preserve the lives of hundreds of human beings for months until other food can be obtained.
