PAYS TO DO GOOD FARMING

The Dry Season Has Been a Good Test.

During the past twelve months the precipitation of moisture has been the smallest known for many years. In fact there are old residents who claim that the past season has been one of the driest ever known. Harvest is now here and the yield of wheat has proven that Morrow county is a great wheat country by a most rigid test.

While the crop is undoubtedly short caused by dry weather, still we will grow in this county close to a million bushels of wheat on an acreage 25 per cent short of last year's crop.
The dry season has proven something else that should be a valuable object lesson to all. It has proven that it pays to do good farming.

In different localities many fields have turned out a good yield, while in the same localities there were fields that were hardly worth cutting. On the same kind of soil and practically the same conditions surrounding, one farmer grows a good crop while his neighbor grows a poor crop. To the close observer this is not a matter of chance, for in every instance the man who raised the good crop used different methods in farming from the man who produced the poor crop. In nearly every instance the man who cultivated the soil properly, even this off year got a fairly good yield.

Prof. H. W. Campbell of Lincoln, Nebraska, is doing much for the farmers in the arid and semi-arid districts. Prof. Campbell has made a special study of the so called dry farming for a number of years and his experiments from a scientific standpoint have produced good results that cannot be doubted.

After 15 years of practical demonstration, Prof. Campbell is now thoroughly convinced that the common methods of soil treatment practiced under all conditions and in all sections of the country are producing only about half what could be produced if proper methods were used.

Prof. Campbell's experiments have been conducted in different sections of North Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas and Colorado. The conclusions reached were that the crop growth and grain yield was governed largely by the physical condition of the soil.

While the conservation of the moisture is an important factor, it is by no means all says the professor.

The farmer like every other line of business or profession, in order to reach the highest degree of success must be a specialist. The Campbell system contains no rigid rules or difficult courses of study to master.

Improvement of methods should be at least worth trying. In speaking of the time to begin, Campbell's Scientific Farmer says: "Begin when you are ready. Begin as soon as possible. Begin just as soon as you understand what you are going to do and why. Begin when the soil needs attention, and that is about all the time."

Now that the harvest time is here, the paper gives the following pointers:

"Begin your soil culture the day you put the harvester into the field. Do not begin the next day.

"When the harvester starts across the field, put right behind it the disk and have the disk follow the harvester all the time.

"Have the disk do as much pulverizing of the soil surface as possible.

"If you cut off the grain and leave the soil exposed to the hot sun of July or August it will only be a few days until all the moisture is taken away from the upper layer. In very many instances delay of a single day is serious.

"In fact it is the time immediately following the cutting of the ripened grain that is most wasteful of the soil moisture. That waste should be prevented at all hazards. And when it is so easily done no farmer should neglect the work.

"By following the harvester immediately with the disk a soil mulch is secured which will protect the surface from the rays of the sun and keep the ground in better condition for the work which should follow soon after. Remember that the time for putting the soil into condition for next year's crop is just after the harvesting of this year's crop. It is the summer time when nature does greatest work in her vast laboratory of the soil, and that is the time to assist nature in every way.

Near Beer

To quench that awful thirst, Heppner's soft drink emporiums have received a supply of the much talked of near beer.

It looks like beer, tastes like beer, smells like beer, but alas, the jags contained in the real article are not there. As a stomach enforcer it is all right, but it is hard to make people believe that an imitation is as good as the real thing.
