Making Steady and Vigorous Growth.

Garfield Crawford in Sunday Oregonian

The stability of a town or country is not denoted by a sudden boom or rush for property, but the constant and steady growth with a demand that is normal for homes and business enterprises, while not showing up on the surface in such glaring figures, has that tendency of drawing conservative people and the ultimate result of building up a substantial town or community.

Heppner never did have a boom, but today it is one of the best towns in Oregon, and the cause of it is that its people are of the sort that don't stop at reverses, but keep driving ahead with a determination that wins.

On June 14, 1903 which was Sunday, at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the sky suddenly became darkened and a most terrific electric storm, accompanied with a terrible downpour of rain and hail, broke over this city. The water gathered in a canyon above town and came down with a rush and volume that wrought havoc and destruction to both life and property in such a manner as to classify the Heppner flood with one of the great catastrophes of the age.

At that time the prediction was made by many that Heppner was off the map, but not so; the prediction of the knocker has gone down into oblivion, and today we have a Heppner that is greater in size and far greater in business than in the day prior to the flood. The country is here and is being more developed, each year, and there is a demand for a town like Heppner, and there always will be only for a town three times the present size.

Improvements Since the Flood.

Before the flood came there was not a modern equipped dwelling or business house in the city, but today we have many. There was no sewerage and the offal and waste of the city were dumped into holes and unused lots. There were no houses with reinforced concrete basements and furnaces for heating, but today we have many. There were no homes costing over $3,000, but today they are common. These facts prove that the people are optimistic and have the nerve to stay with what they know to be a good thing.

Before the flood it was a desire of the populace to build homes along the banks of the placid little stream of Willow creek, but now it is entirely different. Instead of huddling down along the creek, they have gone up on to the high ground and are there building for themselves much finer homes than ever were on the banks of Willow Creek.

Extensive Market Town

Heppner is the market for 3,000,000 pounds of wool, 375,000 bushels of wheat, 100,000 head of sheep, 4000 to 6000 head of cattle and many carloads of horses and hogs. These figures alone prove that there is a place for Heppner and this year it is the largest wheat market in Morrow County. The country around the town is being broken up and put into wheat, for it has been proved that the Heppner country is one of the best wheat producers in Eastern Oregon.

The stockmen are finding that under high priced lands it is necessary for them to do considerable diversified farming in order to have their places on an interesting paying basis, and it is for this reason that the sod is being turned under and the production of wheat is being adopted along with the stock interests.

The Heppner flood caused the destruction of over $200,000 worth of property and nearly 200 lives. Sixty-three homes were destroyed and ten business houses were swept away with the awful current, but today we have overcome this, with the erection of 68 modern homes and 18 new business houses. Vacant houses are not to be found and the only vacant buildings to be found in the city are saloon buildings, made empty by the recent election, and these are not used for the reason that the owners desire that the property be idle.

The fear of washouts by water spouts is a thing of the past and the strip of land along the creek is now used for gardens and things of this nature. On the land where stood the home of R. F. Hynd is now a nursery, owned and propagated by Harry Cummings, which is giving to the people of Morrow County a benefit that had long been needed. The firms of Garrigues & Son and Gilliam & Bisbee, the two heaviest losers, have built larger and better warehouses and the same can be said of all. The sewerage of the city is in a much better condition and the health of the community is second to none in the state. Typhoid and malaria are a thing apart.

Heppner is a community of contented and prosperous people. It has given the City of Portland more moderately wealthy men than any town of its size in Oregon. It has more wealth than any town in the state of its size, and today is offering as good inducements to the investor as any of the Western towns. Heppner is not booming, but Heppner is growing.

A. S. Nusbaum, Batesville, Indiana, writes: "Last year I suffered for three months with a summer cold so distressing that it interfered with my business. I had many of the symptoms of hay fever, and a doctor's prescription did not reach my case, and I took several medicines which seemed only to aggravate it. Fortunately I insisted upon having Foley's Honey and Tar. It quickly cured me. My wife has since used Foley's Honey and Tar with the same success." Slocum Drug Co.
