

CHOICE MISCELLANY

The Search For Speed. Between the sulky with which Flora Temple astonished the world and that of the present year there is as much difference as between the bone-shaking velocipede of forty years ago and the modern bicycle evolved from it.

Various experiments have been tried. The horse was formerly in front of the axle.

Then came the plan of arching the frame, so that his hocks in action would be under the driver's seat. The bike wheels were a distinct advance, but the high seat still remained until experiments with wind shields showed to what extent atmospheric pressure was a factor in making or marring records, and since the new century set in there has been a steady gain in construction.

Not more than fifteen years ago sulky seats were as much as fifty inches from the ground, while the latest models are less than thirty and range in weight from twenty-eight to thirty-five pounds.

Shafts have been lengthened and seats lowered until the driver can no longer look over the back of his horse, but to either side, to watch the course.

While this increases the danger, it reduces the pull against the wind and is expected to be a point in favor of the new records to be striven for this year.

A Story of the Sea.

Anchored amid the soft breezes of Ceylon lay the East India fleet. The weather was faint and sultry, and scarcely any one stirred on board. Suddenly a fore-castle boy sang out in clear treble his childhood's hymn, "I think when I read that sweet story of old!" Before the second verse was reached all the ship's company was joining in pleasant harmony.

After the last line of the hymn had been sung there was silence for a brief space, and then the hills caught up and sounded back the echo, "And crowd to his arms and be blest." Ship after ship followed with old familiar hymns, one after the other, all but the admiral's ship—that was silent.

Would the flagship follow suit before the sun sank into the waters, and what would be its choice? every one wondered.

Then suddenly there was a mighty burst of many voices, as if trained in a cathedral choir, and the warm air vibrated with the grand old "Te Deum." "We praise thee, O God; we acknowledge thee to be the Lord."

New York's Horse Cars.

There are still fourteen horse car lines in operation—namely, the west side belt line, east side belt line, Chambers street cross-town, Chambers and Grand streets cross-town, Bleecker street, Chambers street and Avenue C, Desbrosses street and Sixth avenue, Grand and Desbrosses streets, Seventh and Eighteenth streets cross-town, Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth streets cross-town, Avenue B line, Canal and Grand streets ferry line, One Hundred and Tenth street and St. Nicholas avenue and the West Eighty-sixth street line.

The Buttercup Defended.

Editorials and news items warning flower pickers against the buttercups on account of risk of disease from its perfume have appeared in the newspapers of different parts of the country. An inquiry among Boston physicians gives reason to believe little ground exists for this alarm. It would not be marvelous, however, if a few persons had been affected by such a thing, so often is one man's meat the next man's poison. Cheese and strawberries, for example, and even potatoes, affect unfavorably an occasional individual. The human animal is so curiously constructed that an instance is recorded where the mention of an angle of forty-five degrees was sufficient to make the subject faint.

Corporation of Blind Men.

A business corporation has been successfully established in Vienna by men who are totally blind. The company manufactures brushes and baskets, and all its employees are blind. In the eight months of its existence it has filled orders aggregating 23,000 kronen, making a fair profit, and has enough orders on hand to justify the enlargement of its workshops. Sixteen of the employees are skilled workmen, and the company wishes it known that their wares are sold on their "actual merit," that they are put upon the market "in fair competition with the product of other concerns" and that the blind people want "business, not charity."
