Another Ball Game.

Heppner and Ione played ball Sunday. When we say this we acknowledge that we are taking a great amount of responsibility upon our shoulders and that we may be called upon to prove this assertion.

There was an excursion, just as expected by the 50 people that made the journey, which left the depot in this city at 10:30 and arrived in Ione in time for the ball tossers and fans to take on a feed before retiring to the ball field where the massacre was held.

It was perfectly amazing to see the fortitude of the participants. The way they galloped around those bases it would leave the impression with the spectator, that arrived on the scene after the announcement by the umpire, that it was a college track meet or an endurance race for Marathon runners.

It was a spectacular game in every respect. Every time a man came to bat he hit the ball for three bases whether it went out of the diamond or not. It was also hotly contested, that is, hotly disputed and interest was at a fever heat all the time.

The score is a matter of record and the tally was kept by notching a top board of a nearby fence, until the official scorer ran out of fence, and then he resorted to the use of pencil and paper.

Modesty forbids us mentioning the players or the score, also the time of the game, but they got through in time for the crowd to return to Heppner that night.
