What He Meant.
An Englishman was asked to speak at the Al Fresco Dining club. He arose, struck his monocle on his eye and said this story:
"I was in Chicago at a dinner, you know," said he, "when they were to give a prize for the best story. One fellow got up and told a story and sat down. Another told another story and sat down, don't you know. Then they asked me to tell a story. I arose and began:
"I am an Englishman with a sense of humor."
"And to my amazement they gave me the prize before I could say another word. You see what I mean?"

Little Economies.
Economies are current which are even practiced by the rich. When they'd recoup From losses into which they're drawn They very often feast upon Terrapin soup.
The rich man only deems it sport To take in sail when he is short Of ready cash.
He often lives on frugal fare And bids the thrifty chef prepare Venison hash.
--Louisville Courier-Journal.

On the Contrary.
"Young man," said the nervous pedestrian, "do you toot that automobile horn in order to scare people?"
"No," answered Mr. Chuggins. "I toot it to let them know how scared I am."
--Washington Star.

The End.
"I understand, now that he has married a wealthy widow, that Walker Farr, the eminent actor, will retire from the stage?"
"Yes. His wife declares she will make him cut his hair and raise a quiver."
--Puck.

The Grind.
Don't you hear the stiddy grindin' 'Tis the luscious cider mill? Don't you see the ol' horse windin' In the early mornin' still? Can't you taste the juicy drippin' As they gurgle from the squeezer? Can't you smell the golden poppins As they spatter in the cheese? Sit your straws an' git your bonnets. Tense on, Nell, an' come on, John! How kin possie grind out sonnets When the cider mill is on?
--Boston Herald.

A Suggestion.
"It's hard to keep the wolf from the door," said the poet.
"Why don't you read him some of your poetry through the keyhole?" inquired the cruel friend.
--Pittsburg Post.
