Farmer's week at the Oregon Agricultural College will commence Monday, February 14. The activities will be conducted in institute form and will cover all branches of agriculture, horticulture, dairying and domestic science and art. Any one who is interested in the practical problems of farming, fruit growing and house-keeping and the new and improved methods which may be used in their solution, will do well to attend the exercises of the farmers week.

In the last five years, the number of farms in the Northwest has doubled, until today there are 211,000, which yielded products in 1909 having a total value of $404,000,000. The various states stand as follows: Oregon 75,000 farms; Washington 66,000 farms; Idaho 40,000 farms; Montana 30,000 farms. There are millions of acres of land idle now that could be put under cultivation on a revenue basis. With the back to the land tendencies of the present day, it is certain that the number of farms in the Northwest will continue to increase for many years to come.

The winter short courses opened at the Agricultural College, Tuesday, January 4, with the largest and most representative body of students ever in attendance. There are men and women ranging in age from 16 to 65 years and representing almost every walk of life. Side by side with the girls and boys from the ninth and tenth grades of the public schools of the state are graduates of Brown, Yale, Lake Forest and many other great eastern and middle west universities and colleges. There are farmers and fruit growers who own or manage farms ranging from five to 2500 acres. There are teachers and housewives, stockmen, dairymen, horticulturists, business men and capitalists. This representative attendance speaks well for the future of agricultural Oregon.

It is alleged that Bingham hired a buggy and team from McRoberts & Evans' livery stable in this city on the morning of August 7 last, saying that he would want the team for several days. After several days had elapsed and no word being received as to his whereabouts, W. T. McRoberts became suspicious and made a trip through the interior of the state, finally learning that the team had been sold to the Bangs Livery Company, at Eugene, from whom Bingham received $160 for the outfit, and made a hurried departure for California, where he was located through the officers watching mail received by his wife and father who live at Eugene.
