Racy Metaphor.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is a great example of a ready wit, according to the Pathfinder. He was going with a number of clergymen in to a luncheon, after some ecclesiastical function one day, when some dignitary observed:

"Now to put a bridle on our appetites!"

Quick as lightning the archbishop retorted, "Say, rather, now to put a bit between our teeth."

Spain is the land of the onion—a fact which tempted Mr. Shaw, the author of "Spain of To-day," to fall into the appended easy verse:

The word "Vermont" on a can of maple syrup has always raised that brand about one hundred per cent in the estimation of the buyer. A few years ago, however, a method was discovered of imparting this same delicious flavor to preparations without the use of real maple syrup. This flavoring extract is called Mapleine.

If a dish of syrup made with mapleine and the real Green Mountain kind is placed before a Vermonter, he would not be able to tell the difference between the two. This is largely due to the absolute purity of the ingredients and the great care used in the manufacture.

Mapleine is purely vegetable and makes a syrup that is equal to any and superior to most brands of maple syrup that are placed on the market.

To make delicious flavorings for cakes, ice cream and sauces, nothing is required but a little granulated sugar and water with a few drops of mapleine dissolved therein. Housewives find it a great convenience in preparing puddings out of leftovers.

A little booklet, with the title of "Mapleine Dainties", is published by the Crescent Manufacturing company, who are the makers of Mapleine. The booklet will be sent free to anyone who asks for it. Nearly every grocer carries Mapleine. Try some today and you will say the same that thousands of others have, that here is a flavor with the real maple taste. This little suggestion for a sauce for puddings: Whites of two eggs, one and a half cups of granulated sugar, one cup of milk, one teaspoonful of mapleine. Mapleine is to be used anywhere that another flavoring could be used.

made the payer, instead of preparing a check, merely instructs his banker to debit his account with the sum involved and to credit Richard Roe's account with a like amount.

If, however, payer and payee have their accounts in different banks, the payer then requests his banker to transfer the amount in question to the bank of the payee, with instructions to credit Richard Roe's account with the amount of the indebtedness.

Convenient blank forms are provided for making these notifications, says the Bookkeeper. When the banker receives an instruction of this character he in turn notifies Richard Roe of the payment to his credit and the name of the payer.

In Hamburg the Reichsbank and five important banks use the Giro system. Representatives of these banks meet several times daily at the Reichsbank, where transactions between their several customers are cleared. In Hamburg very little material money is used in effecting transactions, the habit being to settle all obligations, even of the most insignificant character, by Überweisungszettel. When payments are to be made from one city to another this is done usually through the Reichsbank, which has five hundred branches, more or less, throughout the empire. All transactions are undertaken without cost to either payer or payee, and, on the contrary, deposits subject to this modified form of checking usually draw 1 per cent interest per annum.

The advantages of the Giro system fall partly under the head of security and partly of convenience. Danger from forgery is eliminated as the notification sent to a banker by a payer could not by any possibility be utilized advantageously by criminally disposed persons. The only inconvenience observable arises from the fact that receipts for payments are not acknowledged on bills as rendered, unless such receipts are specially sought by messenger after the bank exchange has been made.

It is customary in small local transactions for a payer to note at the foot of bills the date of payment through the banker, and in case of possible dispute the bank is always prepared to clear up misunderstandings. Concerns doing a large volume of business and obliged to make numerous payments daily are spared the annoyance of preparing hundreds of individual checks, as they have merely to write out a list of names and amounts on a long sheet, which they send to their banker.

Miniature Rings.
Miniature rings are a new fashion of the season. It started in England and was brought to New York by an English artist.

The rings take the place to-day of the hair rings of our grandmothers' time and in many cases the same setting is used, the bit of hair being replaced by a tiny ivory likeness of some friend or relative. The New York Sun says in these days the fashion of wearing an ivory miniature as a brooch is regarded as a little too much like blazoning your family affairs before an unsympathetic public, but so inconspicuous are the miniature rings that they escape the criticism.

In a studio in a remodeled stable in East 40th street there is an interesting collection of the miniature rings in various stages of completion. The work is of a very tedious character, since it has all to be done under a powerful glass.

For the most part the miniatures are the size of your thumb, though for dinner rings they may be as large as a big marquise. As it is first necessary to have the mounting before furnishing the likeness the town is searched for antique settings originally used for hair. These are not easy to find.

Cat and Fox Meet.
In a recent number of a German sporting paper, a forester describes a scene which he witnessed in a clearing in the forest.

He came one afternoon upon a big black cat, occupied apparently in the pursuit of mice, and from the shelter of a tree he watched its movements through a field glass. After a few minutes an old fox made its appearance. Slinking slowly forward toward the cat, it lay down within a few steps of it, ready to spring.

The cat had observed its enemy, but beyond keeping a sharp lookout on its movements it made no sign. Shortly a young fox joined the old one, and almost immediately bounded at the cat, which sprang aside and struck its assailant so effectively across its face with its sharp claws that it retired as quickly as it came. After an interval the old fox, advancing slowly and carefully, made its attack; the result was the same, the cat, spitting and hissing, struck out hard, and the fox retired discomfited.

A minute afterward it again sprang forward, but this time the cat got much the best of it and was left in peace.—London Globe.

Plain Gasoline.
Once upon a midday dreary,
As I wandered weak and weary
Down the lane,
I was suddenly sent reeling
By a subtle something stealing
O'er my brain.

And methought the air grew denser,
"Incense from an unseen censer,"
Murmured I,
I was wrong. That odor evil
Floated from a big red devil
Going by.
