for 1900 being 35.7 per cent, and that for 1900-1910, 32 per cent. But notwithstanding this general falling off, the rate of growth was more evenly maintained in this than in any other class. There were not so many extremes. The advantage also was with 1900 in the 21 places of from 50,000 to 100,000, the average gain being 41.6 per cent, as against 39.1 in 1900. It should be explained, however, that Oklahoma City and Schenectady have been excluded from this calculation on account of the abnormal increase in both.

From the 25,000 to 50,000 grade, Muskogee, Okla., and Flint, Mich., are eliminated for the same reason that Oklahoma City and Schenectady are taken out of the 50,000 to 100,000 class. Because of their high figures they would run the average up to an unwonted extent.

But even without them, the showing is altogether in favor of the last census. With Flint and Muskogee out, the mean growth is almost 48 per cent, while the increase for the same places in 1890-1900 was 25 per cent.
