Oregon's Call.

The following poem was clipped rom the Chronicle, The Dalles. Oregon, and handed to us by one of our booster friends. It is full of the booster spirit and we are glad to give it space in these columns:

In this we may claim with truth, without care. With our own Oregon, there is none to com pare.
We live in the west where our spirit grow

Of all the great states, the queen's Oregon,

We have room and to spare in this land of the Our climate is mild, our soil is the best.

What we need here are brains, money and We have room for you here in our great Your chances are many, we're not selfish you see,

Our gates stand wide open, we are calling Our minds, they are broad, our story is true; In prose and in verse we are calling to you.

We are boosters and workers, come join in the There is joy, peace and plenty in our own The West is still young, and with patience and

You will hall with delight, the freedom that's Come forth from the land that is chilly and cold,

Come forth from the land that is worn and old. Where the zophyrs are sweet and the soil is

There is new life and hope in our dear Oregon Is it just, is it right that you labor in vain Where the chances are few, and you work

You'll forget them all here, in our mild Oregon.

We keep telling the story, each day and each Tis the truth, for we love you, have nothing

Our forests invite you, our streams they flow strong, There is bunting and fishing in our great

You will find them all here in our Oregon.

Uuselish the thought which keeps calling to thee. We can offer to all in this land of the West, A home for the weary, contentment and rest Our valleys are fertile, there is hea th in the air-So come to the West, in these you may share 'Tis the call of the West, 'tis the close of the day You live but just once, so live while you may, Our heart's in this thought that urges you on: You are welcome, dear triends, to our own
