Oregon.

I am thinking now of my beautiful home,
Beneath the Oregon skies,
Where o'er the mountains rampant peaks
The eagle swiftly flies.
And far down in the valleys wide,
The summer blossoms wave
Their loveliness, and waft perfume,
To mountains high and grave.
The morning sun speaks forth its joys,
Hailing their lofty height,
And sparkles on the dewy leaves,
Like stars in Heaven bright.
The prairie with its waving grass,
And fields of golden grain,
And rivers that are dumpled by
The gentle drops of rain.
And when the winters bracing breeze
Comes sweeping from the west,
And brings the lovely crystal drops
To form their snowy crest,
And heap them high on lofty crag,
Or in the valleys grand,
To cover with their downy robe
The rich and fertile land.
And down within the mountains side,
The precious metal waits
The sturdy miner to remove
The tunnels darkened gates.
O, leave me in my Oregon home,
To live forever where
My soul can drink its fullness of
The freedom of her air.
—LIZZIE JONES.
