Didn't Like the Job.

"Yes, he got a little fresh, and I told him plainly that I knew my business and added that I was proud of the fact that I am a self made man."

"What did he say to that?"

"He said I made a mistake in not advertising for bids."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Sunny People.

A smiling face will often prove the key to open the door of success.

"I like to have him around because he is always cheerful," said a business man one day, when questioned as to why he chose one of two persons to advance to a position of trust. "You can never refuse her request," said a woman of another, because she always asks you smilingly, as if she were sure that it is the thing of all others which would give you the greatest pleasure."

The dark side of life is not the one that brings inspiration. When brought face to face with it, it may be made a strength-builder to the individual, but it never produces the exhilaration that sets the blood flying faster in the veins, and arouses desire for action.

This is one of the reasons why the true philosopher will persistently assume the guise of cheerfulness though his heart is heavy. By and by this will have its effect on himself. He will find that even under the same circumstances the world seems a brighter place to live in. Through the gloom which gathered about him there come now and then flashes of fun that bring the laugh to the surface, and make bearable what has hitherto appeared beyond endurance.

I remember reading somewhere of a woman who saw drooping lines that told of sadness and regret marking her face. She resolved to cultivate smiles and laughter. It was hard work at first, but by and by she had her reward. The lines disappeared, but, what was better, she found herself smiling often at her own thoughts, which had taken on a summer hue, and the humor to be found by those who look for it, became a part of her nature. I do not know how true the story is, but there is a philosophy of truth in it worthy of attention.—The Northwestern Agriculturist.
