The meetings were held in a large tent, which seated 10,000 people, and in the various churches. Each state reserved its section of seats in the tent and before the meetings began, while the crowd was gathering, would sing their state song and give their yell. Oregon's yell was Hila, hoola, zip, boom, bah; Oregon, Oregon, rah, rah, rah.

Visitors in Seattle were most royally entertained. A large reception committee met every train and escorted the visitors to their various headquarters, where they registered and were assigned boarding places. They were treated to excursions on the lakes and Sound and to automobile rides, besides the very excellent programs which filled each day from 6:30 to 11 o'clock. The Messiah was rendered by 800 voices on Tuesday evening before the opening of the convention, and such large crowds were turned away that it was repeated on Saturday evening.

A SELF FEEDER.

Supply Box of Four Compartments For Fine and Coarse Grit.

I have found that Biddy likes to be able to help herself to certain portions of her ration just when the notion strikes her and in such amounts as suit her taste or need instead of having it doled out to her at uncertain intervals. So to please her, to say nothing of the trouble it saves me in giving her these things when I think, but am not quite sure, that she wants or ought to have them, I made a compartment self feeder like the one shown in the accompanying cut, in which are placed separately two grades of grit, fine and coarse, cracked oyster shell and fine cut bone.

This one was so well patronized, and the condition of the flock seemed to be so much improved, that I have since made a number of them, so that now there is one accessible to each pen of fowls. It did not seem to take them long to learn on which side they would find the particular brand of hardware that they wanted, and there is hardly a time through the day that one or more may not be found picking up from the different pans with evident satisfaction, remarks a writer in Farm and Fireside.

Any sort of light boards may be used in its construction, although I made all of mine from soap boxes, always selecting one wide board from which to saw out the triangular side. The boxes are closed with a lid, to prevent the fowls from getting in at the top. The openings into the pans are only large enough to allow a small amount of the contents to fall out as it is consumed, and the pans are made so small that the birds cannot get into them to soil the feed. The supply box may be made any convenient size. Ours are about eighteen inches high and the top a foot square.

Cattle From Range Territory.

Much has been said of the shortage of cattle which will result from the cutting up of the big ranges. Beyond a doubt fewer cattle will be kept on these lands for awhile, but the condition will be only temporary. When the great ranges are finally divided into smaller ranches and farms, they will keep more cattle than ever before, remarks National Stockman and Farmer. They will produce more feed and will provide better care, which mean smaller losses and better stock. The open range is passing, and some cattle are going with it, but more are bound to follow. The old and extravagant ways are going out with the advent of modern and economical methods on the range as everywhere else in our country's great business enterprises.

Sorghum For Stock.

In the great corn belt two cuttings of sorghum are sometimes secured in a favorable season.

Sorghum may be fed green to all kinds of stock, even to poultry, with very profitable results. A full feed should not be given at first, particularly if the animals are hungry. It is a good practice to give first a light feed of grain or other food and then a small quantity of the sorghum. The latter may be increased day by day until a full feed is reached. Fresh sorghum is a very succulent forage and, like clover, is liable to cause bloating when fed in too large quantities at first. With ordinary precautions no trouble from this source need be feared.—Carleton R. Ball.

Flooding Cranberries.

On Aug. 7, 1906, the Wisconsin experiment station started a flood experiment on three plots of cranberries. On one of these the flood remained for twenty hours with an average temperature of 70 degrees. The other two sections of the flood remained thirty-two hours, with an average temperature of 69.8 degrees. The twenty hour flood resulted in the water soaking of about 5 per cent of the berries, while the thirty-two hour flood caused the water soaking of at least 50 per cent.—New England Homestead.

Last spring it seemed as though I would die, and I think I would if I hadn't taken Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. I haven't been troubled with it since until this week, when I had a very severe attack and took half a bottle of the twenty-five cent size of Chamberlain's Cholera, Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy, and this morning I feel like a new man."
