A friend of the writer is usually rather slow in plowing his garden, waiting until settled warm weather comes. It is noticeable that his garden is very clean, due quite likely in part to the fact that a whole lot of weed seeds germinate and are turned under with the first plowing. More than this, the seed that he puts into the warm, mellow soil usually comes on very quickly and his stuff by midsummer is often as advanced as that of his neighbor's which was planted two or three weeks earlier.
