LAND FERTILITY.

After all, it is not so much the kind of crops raised as it is the way they are raised and the care given the land that causes land to maintain or lose its fertility. In way of illustration day actually produce larger yields of year under a careful system of artificial fertilization. An opposite extreme, the past week. but still further illustrating the truth of the statement above made, is the system of cotton growing which has been followed in the southern states, to see him back. which after from thirty to forty years | Mrs. Knox has been very sick the has left the soil in many sections well past week. nigh bankrupt. Another instance of soil depletion is noticeable in the sections of the corn belt in the middle fact that corn does not pull heavily on up a sled and are enjoying sleighing. the soil and that relatively little attilization and crop rotation to keep the nance of soil fertility is really one of only half each day. subtraction and addition in that if Geo.
