A CURE FOR CHOLERA

A little flock of chickens, for nearly a year their owner's pride and delight, enjoyed apparently perfect health at night, but the next morning nearly a fifth of the flock lay dead. While these were being properly interred, a sixth of the remaining fowls followed their sisters, and the heart of the owner grew very heavy. Just at this time a neighbor came to the rescue, talked learnedly of cholera and prescribed Venetian Red mixed with their food. The remedy was procured and mixed not only with their food but scattered in the drinking vessels; and now, after two weeks, there have been no more deaths.—From February Farm Journal.
