GASOLINE CORN HUSKER.

Expense of Farming Reduced by Small Portable Engines.

At slight expense, by the development of the gasoline motor, the farmer is now enabled with modern labor saving devices to do many times the amount of work formerly possible. The accompanying illustration shows the use of a small portable gasoline engine driving a corn husker by belt transmission.

For operating the husking machine only a four to six horsepower gasoline engine is required, while it is stated that hundreds of bushels of corn have been husked by a machine of this type with only a three horsepower engine under favorable conditions. In central Ohio a four roll machine has been able to husk 250 bushels in a day, requiring four teams and one extra man, besides the three men that operate the machine, with a cash outlay of $25 per day. It is stated that one of these small husking machines operated by a light gasoline engine will handle the same 250 bushels at less than half the expense, or $11.50. This motor driven husker is of the two roll type, the rolls being four feet in length and large in diameter. It runs at high speed, thereby greatly increasing the capacity, which is about twenty bushels per hour under normal conditions, but has been operated at over thirty bushels without difficulty. It is stated that the average run is from seven to ten shocks (twelve hills square) per hour. The shredder head is composed of knives strung on a shaft eleven-sixteenths of an inch in diameter, held in position so that only one knife strikes at a time. The knives strike with a shear cut each two and one-half inches on the stalk, leaving the blades in good condition.

The blower is arranged at the rear of the machine, so that all the stover must pass over the screen. About sixteen feet of nine inch pipe is connected to the machine. A bevel gear is used for driving the corn elevator, which is so constructed that the receptacle for receiving the corn is out of the way in driving up to the machine with a load. The power is disengaged as well as the rolls by the simple movement of a lever attached to a spiral plug.

POINTERS FOR POSTMORTEMS.

Often an epidemic of poultry disease may be traced back to the first case, and if an autopsy of the first victim had been made the disease may not have spread, but the cause and cure been found.

Symptoms of a strange, baffling disease should be tabulated. At death all external conditions should be noted.

READY FOR THE KNIFE.

These should all be compared with internal indications and thus a conclusion be reached.

In performing a postmortem fasten fowl to a table or board, pluck feathers from neck and breast and with a strong knife cut through to the bone at junction of neck and breast.

Now break the bone right before breastbone and with shears cut down along the sides, but not too deep, and draw breastbone and all down, so that organs in upper portion are exposed, but do not cut or tear away the peritoneum, the membrane lining the abdomen cavity, for peritonitis, or inflammation of this membrane, may have caused death.

If death was caused by watery cyst, this membrane generally covers same, and its rupture will allow the water to escape before a good view is obtained.

When all the organs are exposed, study them carefully.

A good plan is to compare them with the organs of a healthy fowl, killed without bleeding and dead about the same length of time.

If you fail to reach a sure conclusion report fully to your state veterinarian or send him a fowl dead from the same disease and get his opinion.

Lack of a constant supply of clean, pure, fresh water before the fowls means defeat in the end.

CHERRYVILLE

The family of William Eby of Hood River is very ill with typhoid fever. One daughter, Miss Minnie, died last week. Mr. Eby was critically ill while two others were convalescent, according to latest reports. Mr. Eby's aged parents and other relatives in Cherryville have the sympathy of the entire community. Mr. Eby, Sr., went to Hood River early in the week.

Some of the good people of this neighborhood met at the church on last Thursday and devoted the day to cleaning the church and parsonage and doing some other necessary work. Luncheon was served at noon by the ladies and a pleasant hour spent socially. Nothing so invites the people of a new locality as working enthusiastically for a common cause. If Christian work in its broadest sense is ever to be a power for good in this place it will be because everyone realizes its need, and irrespective of creed, joins heartily in promoting it. This neat little church building is well built and well located, but there is need of more volunteer effort to make it complete. Great praise is due those faithful ones who have made this good beginning. Let us see to it that their efforts receive our loyal support. Sunday school is held every Sunday at 12 o'clock and preaching service the first and third Sundays of the month at 11 o'clock.
