Mr. and Mrs. Adolf Aschoff are entertaining Col. and Mrs. C. M. Bellefield of Kansas whom they have not seen since the Archoffs left their Kansas home nearly thirty years ago. A more interesting reunion surely could not be enjoyed than this one, for these people were young together during the pioneer days of Kansas. Col. The owner of a 10,000 acre ranch or bunch of ranches near the state line in western North Dakota performs all of his farming operations—plowing, harrowing, seeding, harvesting and the thrashing—with big gasoline tractors, which are extremely simple to operate and require neither coal nor water for their operation. He has ten or twelve of these big "iron horses," and they give him a minimum of trouble. They need neither hay, grain nor water, seldom balk, never have colic or heaves, never are bothered with flies, get their tails over the lines or run away. A decided advantage of these big tractors over horse-drawn or mule-drawn is that they furnish sufficient power so that the plow can be set to a depth of eight or ten inches instead of from three to five, as is the rule in most horse plowing. This means new soil to the surface and better crop returns. Not long since the writer passed through the section in which this ranch is located and saw one of these big horses pulling a gang of six or seven plows. The engine plodded along as quietly and steadily as an old Norman horse, and but one man was needed to operate the outfit. But one span of horses was used on the above ranch, and this was for the quick transportation of the proprietor from place to place.

Boy, Take Off Your Collar

Father raised up us boys kinder mild-like an' easy;
"All wuk and no play, want no part of his creed.

We tended the huskin's an' raisin's an' trainin's,
An' he'd as much fun ez a youngster c'd need,

As fer me, I wuz lazy-like, wrapped up in dressin'
An' prinkin' an' posin an' 'ilin' my head,

An' father most allus w'd smile an' say nothin',
But I reckon I knew that he meant what he sed

When he'd come in an' holler:
"Son, take off your collar,

Get on yer ole clothes and come down in the shed!"

It might mean the woodpile was needin' attention,
Er grindin' the sythes, gettin' ready to hay;

Er it might be most anything you c'd mention,
But it allus meant work for the rest of the day,

An' I allus felt, somehow, that wuk an' grubbin'
Come more natch'ral an' wuzn't worth grumblin' about,

When I hed on my overalls, cowhides, and jumper,
An' the duds I'd put on when I heard father shout

From the medder and holler:
"Son, take off yer collar,

Get on yer ole clothes right away an' come out."

I'm older consider'ble, now, an' don't worry
'Bout sparkin' an' prinkin' an' dressin' ter kill,

I've worked purty hard on these rocky ole acres—
Hed fun too, a plenty, an' suppose allus will.

But when I drive up ter the village ter barter,
An' see youngsters a-loafin' around in my view,

A-crackin' cheap jokes an' a-boastin' an' blowin',
I keep my mouth shet, but I own up ter you,

I'm jest itchin' ter holler,
"Boy, take off yer collar,
Get in yer ole clothes—show us what yer can do!" —W. C. Duncan.

Nebraska pure food laws need overhauling if reports relative to conditions found in Omaha last spring can be relied upon. An investigation by the local board of health revealed the fact the parties who had been awarded the contract for removing dead animals from the city were feeding the carcasses to a big drove of hogs, which when fattened were doubtless worked up into "pure leaf lard" and "fancy" hams and bacon. An inspection of the premises where these hogs were kept revealed a pile of more than 500 carcasses of horses, cattle, dogs, cats and other animals. Being outside the city limits, the case was beyond the jurisdiction of the city health officers, while no law of the state prescribed any limit on the stuff which may be fed to hogs.

The North Dakota experiment station

has hit upon a very sensible plan for instructing the rural population of the state concerning the plant diseases which have done great damage to the farm and garden crops of that commonwealth. Inasmuch as but a small per cent of the country boys and girls carry their education beyond that obtainable in the district school, the station officials argued that here was the place to give some practical instruction in agriculture. They accordingly prepared large boxes, each containing plant specimens showing twenty different diseases which affect crops in the state. Accompanying the specimens are statements giving in brief the life history of the diseases and how to fight them. The complete collection costs $2. The plan is certainly a commendable one and might well be adopted in all sections where fruit, vegetable or grain crops are affected by insect or fungous pests.

Manure that lies a year before it is spread will contribute needed humus to the soil, but considerably more than half of its fertilizing value will have been lost. A way to get around much of this loss during the growing season, when much of the land is occupied with growing crops, is to scatter the manure as fast as it accumulates on the pastures, which need fertilizing as badly as do other portions of the farm.

The soy bean is being put to a use by Chinese and Japanese farmers which might be adopted with decided advantage by American farmers who live in sections where this legume does well. The oil which is extracted from the bean is taking the place of linsed oil, while the cake which is left after the oil is removed is used with excellent results as a substitute for linsed and cottonteed meal as a stock ration. The advantage of the soy bean is that the growing of it means soil enrichment and not soil impoverishment, as is true of both flax and cotton.

A fact that is worth remembering to the poultryman to remember is that a skunk never climbs and that a piece of tight fence three feet high placed across the door of the henhouse will be an effective bar to his entrance.
