REINCARNATION

Eugene L. Thorpe

We were side by side in the first gray dawn
That came o'er the shimmering deep.
In the lustrous glow of the fens below
Our souls were fast asleep.
But they woke to life in the ooze and slime
Of that first new sunlit day,
And were linked at last for eons vast
In chains that bind today.

When God had said, "Let there be light,"
With life in the pulsing heart,
Perhaps a weed or floating reed
Was drifting us far apart.
Perchance the cell of an urchin's spawn
Was home in the dark and deep.
Yet mind ne'er knew, nor the sense could view
The trust we had to keep.

To the sunless floor of the ocean bed
Came Death for his mortal toll;
And he took the clay of the form away,
But never the living soul.
We were born again on another day
In the mine of that glossy fen;
And you and I, as we floated by,
Were lovers, even then.

With only the beat of a pulsing heart,
In a mindless world of sleep,
We coursed away with the first thought ray
That fell on the darkened deep.
You in your beauty of grace and sex,
And I, in my strength of frame—
Were the dying wights of dreamless nights
To wake when the summons came.

In sleep we waited a million years,
And millions were left behind—
But we woke at last from our slumbering past
With a human soul and mind.
In the new-found life we passed along,
With the light of our living day;
Till the shadows ran, for another span,
Of night before the day.

What change was wrought ere we came again
The caverns and cliffs have left;
But we met once more on the sand-locked shore,
By seas where the cave men dwelt.
Your eyes were deep as the Osian pool,
When I toyed with your glorious hair;
And you cried for me, dead, when the soul had fled,
And I left you lonely, there.

Our footprints mark the Cambrian clay,
And we strolled on the Pleistocene shore;
We came again with the Kaffir men,
For a space of life once more.
On the canyon walls we wrote the tale
In fadeless scroll and line,
Of the Pueblo clan and Aztec man—
Your soul still linked with mine.

Our mouldering bones are buried deep
In the crypts of the Sun God, Ra,
Yet by the crags of the Klindock flags
We loved for another day.
And we died again in the fadeless past
With the legions of ancient Rome,
In the martial train on the Alban plain,
For birth in another home.

Now here we live and love once more,
Awaiting that voiceless call
To still the heart and bid us part,
With darkness over all.
But the love that grew from the first gray dawn,
And bathed our lives with light,
Still points the way to another day,
Beyond the shades of night.

And though the years so far beyond
Had joy and care and strife,
This soul of mine knew only thine—
A life joined to a life.
Though prince or peasant be my lot,
And yours be serf or green,
Each death before, will bring once more,
New light with shades between.

A Wild Blizzard Raging

brings danger, suffering—often death—to thousands, who take colds, coughs and la grippe—that terror of winter and spring. Its danger signals are "stuffed up" nostrils, lower part of nose sore, chills and fever, pain in back of head, and a throat-gripping cough. When Grip attacks, as you value your life, don't delay getting Dr. King's New Discovery. "One bottle cured me," writes A. L. Dunn, of Pine Valley, Miss., "after being 'laid up' three weeks with grip. For sore lungs, hemorrhages, coughs, colds, whooping cough, bronchitis asthma, it is supreme—50c, $1.00. Guaranteed by all druggists."
