Growing Walnuts in Oregon

"The present prospects are that the walnut industry will become a very important one in Oregon," said Prof. U. I. Lewis, head of the department of horticulture at the Oregon Agricultural College, in an address to the Lane County Horticultural society recently.

"We find walnut trees growing in nearly every city from Portland to Ashland. While the plantings are not extensive as a rule, they are sufficiently large, nevertheless, to indicate the prospects of the industry. Undoubtedly we are making many mistakes in walnut growing and are not profiting by the thirty years' experience of the California walnut growers. I spent three months, last winter, in California, and had a splendid opportunity to look into the walnut industry in that state.

"In locating a walnut orchard, the most important point is to have deep, rich soil. It will be some years, probably, before we will know the very best locations for the walnut, but we do know that on deep soils trees are growing all the way from the river bottom soils, which are sand and silt, up to the red hill lands.

Since the walnut begins its activity so late in the season, it is not so susceptible to frost injuries as most of our fruit trees. They may be injured, however, on low lands by heavy fall frosts. We should insist on planting the French strains, such as the Franquette and Mayette, etc.

"Personally, I believe that if we are to place the walnut on a sound foundation, we must either plant first class grafted trees, or else the very best seedlings we can procure, with the idea that we will top work the seedlings after a few years. There is too much variation in even the best selected seedlings.

"Concerning the best stocks on which to graft, we will yet be obliged to do considerable experimenting. We can state, however, that at our Experiment Station at the college at Corvallis, we have been much pleased with the California Black.

"We have been very successful in sprouting the seeds in the following manner. At this season of the year, or a very little later, we have placed some boards at the south side of a building, upon these spread an inch or two of moist sand, and then spread out the nuts. They can be covered either with the moist sand, burlap or any material that will hold moisture. As soon as they sprout they can be set in the nursery row, where ground should be very carefully prepared—hand plowed two or three times and then harrowed until in good garden condition, and free from all lumps. I do not recommend the planting of seeds in the field where the walnuts are to grow. Better care can be given them in the nursery row, and they can be transplanted much as other fruit trees. Few walnut trees in California have not been transplanted at least once.

"Walnut orchards need intensive cultivation, and at times will need cover crops, much as apples orchards do. They should not be planted closer than forty feet, and fifty is preferable. While the trees are young, other fruits and vegetables can be grown between the trees.

"The California method of pruning is much better than ours. The trees are headed at 30 or 40 inches. From three to five branches are chosen to form the head. At the end of the first year these are cut back in much the same way as we would cut our apples back. It is necessary, the first year or two, to tie these branches up. For the first few years the trees should be headed back and encouraged to spread, so as to form a larger bearing surface. Where large branches are removed one should use great care in protecting the wounds.

"While the returns from the walnut may not equal the present returns per acre from apples and pears, the cost of maintenance will be considerably less, so that one may plant a larger acreage than of other fruits."

House Plant Insects

For roses, chrysanthemums and other plants that are troubled with green lice (aphis) the best remedy is to cover the plant with a barrel or box that is tight, set fire to a handful of tobacco, place the can with it inside the barrel and give it a good smoking for two hours; then take the plant out and give the aid of the sprinkling pot. You may have to give them a second application if they are very badly infested. For the white insects or mealy bug as it is commonly called, get an atomizer at the drug store and some wood alcohol, then spray the insects with this. This last remedy is the one to use on the scale bug that sometimes gets on house plants.

Farmers who have occasion to draw up contracts, agreements, notes, checks, etc., should remember that it is not the safest plan is to use a lead pencil. The law will recognize the lead pencil, but the writing may be erased too easily, and the amount or terms may be changed. If pen and ink are not at hand when drawing up such papers, use an indelible pencil.
