A trip through Western Washington reveals a wonderful change which has taken place within the last five years. Many of the towns which only five or ten years ago were mere villages have grown to good sized cities, and some of them are still growing. Most of them are now, however, taking a rest. They have in many instances outgrown the surrounding country. In other instances their development has depended upon the milling industry and now that the timber resources of their locality are well nigh consumed, the towns must wait till the country has been developed in some other way.

The extension of the Milwaukee and the Oregon and Washington branch of the O. R. & N. or the consolidated O.-W. R. & N. as it is now called, into the Grays Harbor country, to Seattle, and to Tacoma has improved transportation all over that section. And it has done a lot toward developing an interest in the agricultural and dairying facilities of that part of the State. In 1900 Aberdeen had one passenger each way daily. It now has several over the Northern Pacific, and it is also reached over the Milwaukee and the O.-W. R. & N. But the country must develop as the timber is removed or there will be a time not distant, when business will seem slack. It will take many years to move the forest waste, break up the fields, and put them into some form of productive agriculture. To one who has not visited Tacoma, or Seattle, or other Puget Sound points for several years there are many surprises. Tacoma, in spite of effort to seem prosperous now, is not very demonstrative in her efforts to appear so. The town has developed surprisingly. Rows and rows of high grade office and store buildings confront us. Many new factory developments disclose the use of large fortunes. Some building is being done at this time, and yet there are many vacant offices, and not a few vacant buildings. The residence section is at a standstill. The conveniences the town offers are sufficient for the present. One of the best improvements noted is the finely arranged recently opened new union depot. It is something a little out of the usual. But its description is a story in itself. Seattle also has two new stations which would bear a credit to any city, even Seattle with all her perve.

Seattle is a greater surprise than all the rest. Eight years ago First Avenue was the main and practically only street. A half dozen streets parallel it now, several of which out do it daily in commercial transactions. The town extends northward half way to Everett and contains two or three suburbs that are cities themselves. And the character of the improvements are metropolitan. The streets are wide, every block is crossed by two broad alleys, the streets are cleaned and well lighted. If the obligations incurred in providing all the improvements are not burdensome then the city is to be congratulated. However, we doubt if the latter is true. Seattle people are extremely conservative in speaking of their financial burdens and the supposition naturally arises that they are not especially proud of them. Here, too, as in Tacoma there are a good many empty buildings and office rooms. The inquiry is made in searching way, "How are things in Oregon?" We cannot avoid thinking that Seattle people are carrying more than they want, but like a fellow with a mouthful of hot potato, there is no way to dispose of it without appearing unseemly. But you ought to see their streets and their theatres and churches and schools.

At last the unbelievable result of a favorable vote from the United States Senate for the bill to change the form of elections to the honorable office in the upper house of the National Congress. The measure is now in fair way to be presented to the various states for their ratification, after which the people of the country will choose their senators by direct vote as they have heretofore chosen their representatives. The supposition is that the change will enable the people to name the man best fitted for the place, regardless of party, pull or financial influence. The old way has been an expensive one. Expensive for the public for it has usually consumed a good portion of the legislative sessions in every state in the Union, and distracting the attention of the state lawmakers from the true purpose of their official positions. This alone has cost many a state each session as much as the entire session should have cost. It has been expensive for the man who made the race for in many instances the offices have cost several times what it pays and hence the United States Senate has come to be a millionaire's positions. No merely competent man has been able to reach it. To be a senator means to be independent in means of dependent on some influence which has ulterior motives for extending support. In either case the state loses the opportunity for securing the best that can be had in ability and devotion to duty. The direct election of Senators will enable any one to compete for the position and it will not necessarily mean that money gets the place.

The national election to be held in Mexico to fill the vacancy due to the resignation of President Diaz will come off Oct. 15. At present only one candidate is certain, namely, General Madero, but there is some probability that General Reyes will make his presence known before that time.

RAILWAY DRINKING CUP TO GO.

The Oregon State Board of Health is promoting a new bill which will have for its motive the prevention of disease dissemination. It is similar to a bill that has already been made law in Idaho and some other states, and prevents the use of public drinking cups. This may not be a bad thing. In many places drinking fountains are now arranged so no cups is necessary and there seems to be no reason why they could not be more generally provided. The bill to be proposed is as follows:

Whereas, It has been proven beyond doubt that the use of the common drinking cup is responsible for the spread of many infectious and contagious diseases, particularly is this true of such dire diseases as Consumption, Syphilis, Diphtheria and many others, and that

Whereas, The abolishment of what is known as the common drinking cup would be for the betterment of the public health,

Therefore Be It Resolved, by the Oregon State Board of Health that the use of the common drinking cup on railroad trains, in railroad stations, in the public and private schools, in all the educational institutions of the State of Oregon is hereby prohibited, from and after September 1st, 1911.

That on and after this date, no person or corporation in charge or control of any railroad station or any railroad train, electric car or any public conveyance or in any public or private school or any State educational institution shall furnish any drinking cup for public use, and no such person or corporation shall permit on said railroad train or station, or on said electric car or at said public or private school or said State educational institution, or on said public conveyance, the use of the common drinking cup.

DURABILITY OF THE PAINT

The durability of the paint in which black shales have been used is vouched for by many persons who have tried it. Black shale is used to some extent in paint for buildings, but chiefly in the manufacture of a black filler for iron-work.

Yellow shales are found in many places throughout Pennsylvania. In a number of places these shales have been utilized in the manufacture of paint, and when ground fine and mixed with oil they are very serviceable. Their principal use, however, is in the manufacture of oilcloth and linoleum. They are considerably lighter in color than the others.

Red shales have also been employed in the manufacture of paint in many places in the State, but at present these shales are being worked for this purpose in only three localities. The operations are not limited, however, by the distribution and amount of the shales but by the market for the product. Certain of the red shales are manufactured into a filler for different kinds of both metal and wood. This is used as a base in many prepared fillers and is frequently mixed with white lead. Most of it is sold to steel and iron manufacturers, particularly locomotive, safe, and structural-steel makers, and is shipped to many points throughout this country as well as to Canada, Mexico, and France.

The report describes the principal Pennsylvania plants for mining and reducing the shales to pigment. A copy may be obtained on application to the Director, United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

MANY USES OF LIME

According to Mr. Burchard, recent tests have indicated that magnesium limes are generally best suited to structural work and high-calcium limes to chemical purposes, but for certain uses the reverse of this rule is true, and for many applications in each branch of industry either type of lime is equally well suited. The chemical uses of lime are much more varied than the uses for soil renovation or sweetening, for insecticides and fungicides, for egg preservation, for water and sewer purification, as a disinfectant and deodorizer, for bleaching, in the manufacturing of numerous chemicals, in gas manufacture, in the milling industry, in paint and varnish manufacture, and in the paper, smelting, beet-sugar, tanning, and many other industries.

It is not known what amount of lime is used for agricultural purposes, but Mr. Burchard notes that many of the producers reporting to the Survey are farmers who do not operate on a commercial scale but merely burn a kiln or two of lime occasionally for their own use. In some sections lime is known to be very extensively used as a soil sweetener, and most of the State agricultural experiment stations have published bulletins discussing its effect on farm crops.

The Big Noise.

When in the public places
The noisy boys appear
And holler with their faces,
"We're here because we're here!"
You catch the conversation
And do not have to grope
Concerning their location.
They make it clear, we hope.

You couldn't get it plainer
Although they had a band
And went at it insatiate,
To make you understand,
And if you pay attention
As they pass by
They will politely mention
The only reason why.

Though sometimes you may wonder
As they appear in view
In elsewhere wouldn't do,
As voices hit the ceiling
And jar the atmosphere
You sort of have a feeling
They're here because they're here.

The youthful spirits bubble
Like water from a spring,
And, while not hunting trouble,
They'd joy on it to swing
Quite useless in protesting.
They must let loose the noise
That is their lungs congesting.
For boys must still be boys.

Direct Descent.

"Mother, isn't it just lovely? Uncle George says we have a family tree."
"I am sure I never heard of it."
"But it is so. He knows all about it."

"And what kind of a tree is it?"
"An apple tree. We are descended from Adam and Eve, and he says that was their tree on account of that little trouble over the apple."

No One to Save Him.

"The poor man!"
"What do you mean?"
"He was lost in thought."
"Well?"
"And it was such a strange territory to his companions that none dared go in and rescue him."

Refreshing His Memory.

"Where did I see you before?" asked the oily tongued stranger.
"Maybe in New York," said the simple minded countryman.
"Sure; that was the very place!"
"I thought it might be because I never was there."

And He Did.

"He said he would die for her."
"How romantic!"
"Naw. Foolish."
"Why?"
"Cause the dye he used fades out a funny yellow and makes his hair look like a calico mop."
