Secretary of Agriculture Wilson directs attention to the chronic shortage of men in the agricultural field and urges all to unite in supplying this deficiency by saner methods of education. While the factory towns are overpopulated and there is more or less unemployment there, the high prices of all foodstuffs hold out golden returns to those who are willing to put brains and energy into the tilling of the soil, anywhere and everywhere. Secretary Wilson says: "The demand of the United States for lawyers and physicians is more than met by the professional schools, while the demand for educated farmers is strikingly neglected.

"The fields are crying aloud for trained men. Thousands of young men are graduating from our law schools and there are jobs waiting only for a small percentage of them. Housekeepers are complaining of the cost of living. It would seem to be wise for our educators in their national meetings to consider these problems.

"It might be wise to consider about how many young lawyers will be needed in the next year to take the place of the older men who are dropping out. That could be determined very easily. Then, if the attention of this class of students were called to the demand of the industries for educated men, a different direction might be given to many young men who seem to be 'drawing their bows at a venture.'"

THERE is a lot of dissatisfaction with the nominee for county superintendent. A considerable number of the friends of Prof. Henderson are considering placing his name on the ballot independently. That some good democrat does not enter the race is a disappointment to many, but the nominee of that part does not think it would be practicable for him to go further with the contest. No man in the country can undertake to capture the position for there are none with the acquaintance necessary to secure it. Many of the city teachers cannot afford it and it really is a concession on the part of an able man to take it. But it will not do to drop the fight for some good, clean, worthy, competent person to execute the duties of this office. The educational interests of the county are at stake, the quality of the teachers who shall have charge of the children both as to morals and ability depend very largely on the character of the county superintendent and it will not do to treat the matter carelessly.

THE mosquito season is at its best. This cool spell will prepare the way for another army of these tormentors. Where do they all come from? Tin can alley furnishes the most of them. Glancing into a water barrel this morning we found the contents alive with wrigglers. A spoonful of oil did the business. Better than turning the water on the ground because the mature ones would then burst out of their pupae cases and complete their natural careers. The oil destroys all of them. A dime's worth of coal oil will fix millions of them and save a doctor bill a hundred or a thousand times as much. Just use a little of the same oil on all compost, and sprinkle a little in the closet and see how soon the drove of flies disappear. A dime's worth of oil will, or may, save you a fight with typhoid, diphtheria, malaria or consumption.

THE Lents Band has been reorganized with a lot of new men and a goodly number of the former members. The new organization has promise of eclipsing anything similar that has previously existed in the town. This is to be expected for the town warrants it. Let us hope that the membership will start in with the intention of staying with their purpose for a long time. Going into a thing of that with the idea of throwing it up at the first occasion something goes crosswise. Learning a little music is not the only thing a band member may get; the co-operative spirit is developed and an ability to resist temporary impulses for independence is encouraged.

THE summer magazine is upon us with all its silly stories and trashy reading. Why not in the summer as well as the winter give the public something worth while. The summer is full of great projects. Put some of them on paper. Political movements are at the climax. A little more pure politics would not hurt us. Nature was never better. Why not indulge in a number of excursions into its vast libraries and produce something refreshing and instructive.

SCHWEITZER & Manz move into new quarters this week. The new location besides being conveniently located has the distinction of being neat and airy, good light and pleasantly arranged. Here's wishing well to the most accommodating firm of tailors in the Mt. Scott country.

Eugenics may be expected to have a prominent place at the Salem State Fair. A plan is now under way to show in each town boys and girls under one year, under two years and under three years. The prizes will be awarded on points rather than that of doll-like beauty, and the best children will then be taken to the State Fair and entered in a statewide contest.

Salem's Cherry Fair promises to be highly successful this year. The dates are July 11, 12 and 13. Cherry exhibits and entertainment features will, it is expected, be more extensive than ever before.

WOODROW WILSON DEMOCRAT'S CHOICE

of Champ Clark, released all Clark delegates, at the same time saying that Missouri would vote for him to the end. Mayor Fitzgerald, of Boston, withdrew Governor Foss from consideration.

By this time it was apparent Wilson would win on the 46th ballot and the convention was in an uproar, delaying the call for a long while.

During the evening session, Governor Thomas R. Marshall, of Indiana, was nominated Vice-President. In the voting for Vice-President, Senator George E. Chamberlain, of Oregon, was a conspicuous figure, and had an organized effort been made he probably would have been the nominee.

The nomination of Woodrow Wilson is significant, in that the honor fell to him without the aid of Wall Street interests and in open defiance to them. His victory is a victory for W. J. Bryan, who put up the fight of his life against the interests and bosses. Through Bryan's efforts the democratic party was saved from the same force that controlled the Chicago convention. Wilson is progressive and the platform upon which he will stand is of the progressive type.

In nominating Woodrow Wilson, the Baltimore convention chose the strongest candidate whose name was presented and it also nominated the most popular candidate in the field. And in doing this it utterly thrust aside the once powerful bosses who have been arraigned against Wilson from the start.

Wilson won on his record and on his popularity and in the face of the sturdiest opposition the conservative faction could muster. In nominating its most popular candidate, the democratic convention has not only paved the way for a probable Democratic victory in November, but has made it embarrassing for Theodore Roosevelt to go forward with his threat to enter the field at the head of a progressive third party.

Result Embarrassing to T. R. Wilson's nomination will prevent the defection of progressive Democrats to a Roosevelt standard, if one is raised, for there is not enough diffidence between the policies of Roosevelt and of Wilson to justify the democrats in deserting their own party in a campaign where they already have visions of victory perching on their banner when the November struggle is over.

The story of Wilson's triumph is a long one. He entered the convention the second strongest candidate, so far as instructed delegates were concerned, and at the outset he saw his more formidable opponent grow in strength until more than a majority of the delegates had given him their support.

Scale Turned by Bryan Yet that majority did not suffice to nominate Clark. This convention ignored the rule and refused to give two-thirds to Clark after he had attained a majority. Had Clark been able to run up that majority without the support of the 90 votes cast by Tammany Leader Murphy, he would have been nominated, but when Bryan branded the Tammany votes he made them a curse upon the candidate for whom they were cast, and from that time to the end Clark's strength withered and fell away. From that same moment Wilson grew.

NECESSITY OF EDUCATIONAL AGRICULTURE

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, Corvallis, Ore., July 2.—That the teachers of the rural schools and, even more necessarily, the county supervisors, must have the spirit of modern country life, must have an enthusiasm for and a sufficient preparation for the teaching of agriculture and industrial branches before they attempt to introduce them into the rural schools and the grades and high schools of the cities, was given earnest emphasis in a lecture yesterday by Prof. E. D. Ressler, director of the summer session at the Oregon Agricultural College.

"So much has been said already as to the necessity of giving children in the country schools and in the grades some industrial training, something in their studies which will attract them to the farm and interest them in agriculture, rather than turn them away from it toward the small clerkships and like overcrowded occupations in the city, that argument on that score is no longer necessary," said Prof. Ressler.

"Not enough emphasis has been laid, however, on the preparation of the teacher for this important work. Doubtless the first thought of some of the teachers, when the introduction of domestic science and agriculture into the grades was broached, was, 'How can I do it? How can I add another branch to an already crowded curriculum? How can I teach cooking and sewing and planting and hewing, raising pigs and chickens and other animals, when I have never lived on a farm in my life, and don't know anything but the vaguest generalities about such things?'"

"The first essential is that the teacher should be given a knowledge which will awaken her interest and enthusiasm for the things to be taught. One can not teach adequately subjects about which one neither knows nor cares anything. Rural economic problems, the trials and successes of the farm, field and home, should be presented first. Then they should be assisted with detailed programmes and outlines, with illustrative material and lesson helps, with occasional outside talks to the pupils by experts in the different lines, and with training given in the itinerant schools to be sent out by the extension division.

"The crux of the whole matter may, perhaps, be said to be in the fact that teachers quite without previous scientific training in domestic science and agriculture will be required to teach these subjects and get as good results as in the branches of education for which they have had years of preparation—and probably without the supervision or direction of any one of scientific training in these branches.

"That brings me to the point I consider immensely important—the necessity of training for the county supervisors, that they may furnish teachers with interest and enthusiasm for their work plus actual help in gathering, arranging and presenting subject matter. The supervisor does not necessarily need to be an expert in teaching classes in the 'three R's' for the teacher is prepared to do that. His province is that of a judge of class-room presence, discipline, and the technique of teaching, and of an able assistant in such problems as the teacher alone can not cope with. Agricultural education comes under the latter head.

"My idea, then, is that the supervisors should prepare themselves thoroughly in the subject of teaching industrial subjects; and that the teachers, as rapidly as possible—during summer sessions or between terms—equip themselves with the materials. Working together with the assistance of the college always ready, they should be able to meet their problem adequately."
